IN NEED.—An aged couple named Barton came to Salem from Perleton this fall relying upon assurances that work could be obtained here readily, but so far he has been unable to find anything to do. They are living in a small house near the brick-yard south of the Penitentiary, and are in dire need of assistance, as they are almost wholly without food and clothing. The Catholic Ladies' Aid society has rendered them temporary relief, but their needs are greater than can be supplied by one society, hence it is incumbent upon the general public to lend assistance.

English plum pudding, New England mince meat, new crop nuts, and all other Thanksgiving delicacies at J. A. Van Eaton's grocery store.

ball wall and in consequence is making tackles all over the field. A common fault with Willamette men is that when their half backs attempt to advance the ball the forwards amble along admiring the play instead of trying to be at the runners sides and keep tacklers off. This fault is more noticeable on the defense when a man has missed a tackle or been knocked down by interference, he enjoys a nap on the sod for a while, sits up, rubs his eyes, feels himself all over to see if he has been hurt, and then slowly arises to his feet to see how far the opposing runner has advanced. If a man is knocked down he should get up as soon as possible and go after the runner again. Chances are that he will overtake him before he reaches the goal or at any rate arrive in time to save his side a few feet by a well directed push.

Webb is a man of but two weeks football experience. He is improving rapidly, however, and I feel sure he will hold his own.

Bert Savage has given place to Jordan, Bert is a hard and conscientious player and has held his position down well. He has not, however, the correct build for tackle and is far too light. Jordan is heavy, strong, and speedy, and I think will strengthen the position. He put on a football suit for the first time last Wednesday, but he has the making of a fine player and is learning the game rapidly. Our backs Murphy, Savage, Paige, McCormack and Will Evans are the best in the Northwest and assisted by Guis and Olinger, the speedy ends, they will leave nothing to be desired in offensive work.

To the Willamette team I offer my heartfelt congratulations. Their improvement and their record thus far have been remarkable. I feel that my work would have been impossible with any other set of men. They have admitted their ignorance of the game, expressed their great willingness to learn, and have done to the best of their ability what they have been told to do, no matter how much this opposed their own views on the subject. To Captain Murphy and his eleven men and Mr. VanWinkle, the manager, I owe my thanks for the manner in which I have been treated, and I sincerely hope they may ever be as successful as they have been in the past.

CLINTON R. MORSE.

RESTORED TO CITIZENSHIP.—Governor Lord yesterday issued two pardons to inmates of the penitentiary, they being Thad A. Dunn, sentenced from Yamhill county to a year's imprisonment, and Harold Pikington, of Portland. The time of the former lapsed only three days of expiration, and he was a trusty. The latter was serving a year's sentence for misappropriation of money, and was a young attorney of good social and business standing.

THANKSGIVING DINNER.—Remember the Thanksgiving dinner to be given from 1 to 4 o'clock in their new church parlors, by the Ladies Aid society, of the Baptist church. Mrs. S. R. Jessup has full charge, and families wanting a family table will apply to her for such accommodations. Minnie E. Farmer secretary. eod

REMEMBER THE PRICE.—The price must always be considered when selecting. Mitchell the Repair man repairs locks, guns, typewriters and makes keys at prices more than reasonable. Drop in at 288 Commercial Street.

A TURKEY.—That is the Thanksgiving of our land, but up in Alaska a box of soap is presented to the native for his holiday meal. The Eskimau likes good soap, therefore the famous Salem make would surely please him.

The best assortment of underwear for men, women and children, will be found at the New York Racket. Their prices are the lowest. Now is the time to fit yourself out for cold weather. e-o-d-2t

A NOTABLE COLLECTION.

Mrs. Wm. Molson's Collection of Indian Baskets.

It was the writer's good fortune and pleasure several months ago to be the guest of Mrs. Wm. Molson, whose beautiful home is near Darry, in Polk county, and who has a collection of baskets of Indian make, which, as a private collection, is doubtless unexcelled.

Mrs. Molson is a daughter of the late Col. J. B. Nesmith, an old and highly respected pioneer and once United States senator from Oregon. Her residence in Oregon since an early day, and her father's extensive travel together with the assistance of enthusiastic friends, has made it possible for her to acquire this splendid collection, of which she is pardonably proud.

The interior of Mrs. Molson's residence is striking in its individuality, and withal most pleasing. The library in particular, is an ideal one, as aside from being exceptionally well filled, it contains so many curious, beautiful and rare bric-a-brac.

Kilequis is the Indian word for baskets, and they were everywhere. The roomy reception hall contained a large cabinet, revealing through its glass doors several rows of them, and they were hung upon the walls and placed upon the floor, and the mantle over the grate held several small ones; while from unexpected corners peeped divers Indian curios and relics. In one corner stood a fac simile, in all but size, of a teepee, or wigwam, from Dakota, representing the home of a Plains Indian, and by a window was a divan covered with a Navajo blanket. From an immense pair of Mountain sheep horns depended an Indian coat, made of Caribou skin, which was sewed together with a nicety of stitch and finish that would put to shame many a dainty figured "pale face" maiden. The coat came from the Hudson Bay country, and bore a painted border, applied with an instrument similar to a comb, and set in some manner unknown to my entertainer.

She is an energetic little woman, with the prettiest black, wavy hair you ever saw, and when talking about her curious collection in her vivacious manner, her expressive brown eyes grew brighter still, so that there was a charm aside from the interest the baskets awakened.

"How many have you?" I asked.
"Well, big and little, old and young, I have 115. The oldest is 50 years old, and was woven by a Kikokit Indian on the Yakima reservation. It is made of cedar roots and is ornamented with 'squaw grass'; it holds ten gallons and is water tight. The women carry such as this on their backs, held by a band passing across their foreheads. These baskets make a great deal of work for the 'cloochman,' for it takes a woman all day to weave three rounds of a basket less than a foot across, and this basket, full of berries, weighs about 80 pounds, so it is a heavy load."

Among the baskets is a Haidah hat, from Alaska, which, being made in the same manner as the baskets, may therefore be properly termed a basket. One side was painted in a grotesque semblance of a human face, and another in imitation of a beaver's tail, which is a favorite design in Indian workmanship.

The Shasta caps were the most delicate in coloring, intricate in design and finished in workmanship of any of the baskets, with the possible exception of the Neah Bay baskets, which, while faultless in weave, are not so pleasing in coloring because of the aniline dye employed.

To prove the truth of my statement that an Indian hat and basket are well-nigh one and the same I will again quote my hostess, who said: "They use these for hats, and also to pick berries in. I presume they do not hesitate to use them alternately, for they are not at all particular."

The foundation of these caps is spruce roots, shredded finely, and they are ornamented with a fine grass that grows near the snow line, and is obtainable only at certain seasons of the year; also, with the stems of maiden hair fern, which makes a glistening black decoration.

Some of the baskets showed scorched spots inside. Such had been used for cooking purposes by placing the food within and putting in heated stones.

One basket was made by "Libby," the last chiefest of the Coos Bay tribe, who died a few years since at the age of 105 years.

There were bags for carrying meal, or grain, made by the Cayuse Indians, and, while the design was neatly carried out, there was an indefinable something about them, other than the name, that reminded one of the cayuse ponies. These bags were so strongly made as to be practically indestructible with ordinary use.

From Arizona there was a Moqui plaque, of highly colored design, for use in some religious ceremony. Also two beautifully formed and woven baskets for gathering nuts, grain and seeds.

From New Mexico were two ollas, (pronounced o-las) or water-jars, of that graceful and convenient shape that cannot tip over, one of them being from the Mesquero reservation, and the other from Maricopa Wells.

An oblong, split affair was a pillow, from the Sandwich Islands. It was made of splints, was very soft and pliable, and had a soft filling, as pillows should, but as the closest scrutiny failed to discover the beginning or end of any splint or means of ingress or egress for the "feathers," it was impossible to determine of what material they were. These pillows are placed under the back of the native's neck.

A long basket from the Warm Springs reservation in Eastern Oregon, was made of one piece of cedar bark, sewed together with the toughest of fibre and interlined with thinner bark. The bottom of this basket was concave, and even with our tools it would be very difficult to reproduce it.

The smallest basket in the collection was made near Montreal Can., and is little larger than a thimble.

Then there were oil bowls, of goats horn, from Queen Charlotte Islands, carved very similarly to the totem poles of Alaska. With them was a horn spoon which my hostess said was not the "great horn spoon" so often sworn by.

An odd little affair was a buckskin covered board, ornamented with bead work, to which was bound a miniature "pappoose," clad in buckskin.

All of the baskets, hats, caps and bags, evinced a remarkable adaptability to their intended use. The water and berry baskets were made water tight, while those for rougher use, gathering clams, for instance, were loosely woven, allowing the water to escape. The drinking cups contract toward the top a very little and most of the hats are smoothly finished inside, for an Indian is as susceptible to small worries as his white brother, however stoically he may endure greater tortures than having his hair pulled. And think of the hours and hours of patient toil attendant upon gathering and preparing the material for use, apart from weaving it.

I have mentioned only representative types of baskets, and there remain many more, yet unspoken of. In fact, this collection is so extensive and comprises so many rare and curious specimens that the Smithsonian Institution has requested its owner to have some of them photographed for reproduction in their reports. This collection or a portion of it, will be exhibited at the Y. M. C. A. Wednesday night, and is well worth attention.
