ED. JOURNAL:-Lloyd Montgomery is no more. The crime for which he forfeits his young life is an atrocious one-a son shoots his father and mother down, and to hide his crime, kills the only witness. Surely no one but a fiend in human form could do a deed so foul. But hold, let us examine into the case a little more closely, and see if nothing of the bringing up or home surrounding of this young man, but I do know something of the discipline do know something of the discipline and environment of many other young men who are traveling in his foot-

How many a young man can you name, dear reader, who is growing up in idleness and ingorance, a burden and trial to his parents, and a menace to society-and all for want of proper $1 each for the round trip or 75 cents guidance and discipline on the part of one way, the round trip ticket being parents, teachers-yes, and lawmakers and executors of the law! If young people are allowed to "come up," will they "come up" right? I serve meals at 25 cents each. This is a answer most emphatically, No; they will not. And if such a young person grows up a young hyena and kills somebody in a fit of anger before reaching mature manhood, who is most to blame, those who have allowed him to become what he is-his parents who sometimes allowed him to have his own way and run the whole house, and at other times boxed his ears for the most trival offences his teachers, who were too weakkneed to correct him, for fear of the general, who have looked on idly, but have done little toward making him better-or the young man himself for not being smarter than his parents his teachers, and his neighbors, and

I know parents who are bringing children up in such a way that, if the child should grow up a ruffian and commit murder, it would seem to me only a natural consequence of the parents' neglect-yes, and the parents'

Hundreds of people are crying out for vengeance, but how many of these same people through carelessness, ignorance or vice of their own are raising, Lloyd Montgomery in their own families? And may not they reap the reward, and their vengeance be on their own heads?
