FOR POULTRY RAISERS.

Doesn't Matter how Chickens for Market are Handled? Yes, for this reason: The dealer has to depend upon the appearance of his poultry in order to get a first class price.

A great many people bring their chickens in a very low coop, which is as bad as tying their legs, for if they cannot stand entirely straight they will sit down, which lets their breast rub against the bottom of the coop, resulting in a little bruised place about the size of a two-bit-piece, and should a customer see it he would at once say, "That chicken has been sick," and you could not explain it away.
