W. J. BRYAN'S SPEECH.

In talents or in virtues or in merits, but we agree in this—that, wherever government comes in contact with the citizen, and wherever the citizen touches government, all must stand equal before the law. We agree that government can be no respecter of persons, and that its strength—its watchful strength—must be the protector of the fortunes of the great and poor, and that it shall stand an impartial arbiter between all of its citizens. We must agree on this. We agree that there are inalienable rights, the rights which the government did not give, rights which the government cannot take away. We all agree that governments are instituted to insure and preserve these rights, and we agree that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed. We know no divine right of kings. The people gathered and in assemblages like this all over this broad land are the sovereign source of all power. These citizens are the substantial foundation upon which rests our form of government. And while our citizens appreciate the responsibilities of citizenship, and strive each in his own way and according to his judgment to bring civilization to a higher ground and make the government each year a more fit expression of the virtue of the people, as long as this is desired by all we can agree in the fundamental principles, though we may differ in the minor points which separate us. It was here I received my first instruction in Democracy. I do not use it as a party name; I mean it in a broader sense—that Democracy that recognizes the brotherhood of man. It was here I learned the truth of the poet's language—

"Honor and fame from no condition rise." The clothes do not make the man, and we all but contribute to the nation's greatness; and all who have the good of their country at heart, it matters not what their station in life, what their ancestry, what their surroundings—all these stand upon common ground, and all are citizens. (Applause.) It was here, too, that I learned that principle that must go is only because they were not satisfied at all, that they became free and independent; that we have the government which we have today. And so, when a question is raised, we ought not to denounce the man who raises it as an agitator. We should simply inquire, "Is the proposition which he presents a right one?" Let me beg of you to give careful and just consideration to the issue of this campaign. Take our condition as it is; take the remedies proposed, and then see if the remedies are real remedies, and if they will improve the condition of the body politic. Every reform that is good, every reform that will better the condition of the masses, is a reform that should receive the support of every voter of this country.

"Let me say just one word: I believe it was said of Lincoln, or Lincoln is quoted as saying, when a man asked him whether he thought the Lord was on his side, he said 'He was more anxious to be on the Lord's side.' (Applause.) That was one way of expressing a great truth, and that is that right will prevail. Ah, my friends, there is one truth taught by 6000 years of human history; it is that truth is omnipotent, and truth alone will prevail. You may impede its progress; you may delay its course, but after a while truth will show its irresistible power, and those who stand in its way will be crushed beneath it. You ask me if these reforms which we advocate will be accomplished. I say if they are right they will be accomplished. If they are wrong we ought not to desire their accomplishment. We who believe that they are right can only go forth doing what we can, giving such impetus to them as we are able to give, and then trust to the righteousness of our cause to prevail over those who oppose us. I thank you for your kind attention." (Enthusiastic applause and cheers.)

M'KINLEY AND THE LADIES.
He Talks to Five Hundred of the Fair Sex.

To the delegation of Cleveland ladies who called at Major McKinley's home in Canton Wednesday, he made the following remarks:

"Mrs. Avery, I greatly appreciate this friendly call from the women of the city of Cleveland, and assure you that I do not undervalue their gracious message of congratulation, which you have so eloquently delivered. It is an assurance of the deep interest which you feel and which should be felt by every family in the land in the public questions of the day, and their sentiment at the polls. There is no limitation to the influence that may be exerted by women in the United States, and no adequate tribute can be spoken of her services to mankind throughout our eventful history. In the distant period of its settlement in the days of the Revolution, in the trials of western pioneer life, during the more recent dread days of our civil war, and, indeed, in every epoch of our progress as a nation, the devotion and sacrifices of women were constantly apparent, and often conspicuous. (Applause.)

She was everywhere appreciated and recognized, though God alone, could place her service at its true value. The work of women has been a power in every emergency, and always for good. In calamity and distress she has ever been helpful and heroic. Not only have some of the brightest pages of our national history been illuminated by her splendid example and noble efforts for the public good, but her influence in the home, the church, the school and the community, in moulding character for every profession and duty to which our race is called, has been potential and sublime. It is in the quiet and peaceful walks of life where her power is greatest and most beneficial.

"One of the tenderest passages to me in the works of John Stuart Mill beautifully expresses this thought. It is recorded in his autobiography where he paused to pay high and grave tribute to his wife, of whom he could not speak too much. He says she was not only the author of many of the best things introduced, but she inspired every good thing I did."

"Many men there are whom frankness would not withhold, but command, like expressions of obligation to woman—wife and mother, sister, friend. (Applause.) One of the best things of our civilization in America is the constant advancement of women to a higher plane of labor and responsibility. The opportunities for her are greater than ever before, and it is singularly true here, where practically every avenue of human endeavor is open to her. Her impression is felt in art, science, literature, song and in government. Our churches, our schools, our charities, our profession and our general business interests are more than ever each year decided by her.

"Respect for womanhood has become with us a national characteristic, and what a high and manly trait it is; none is holier it stamps the true gentleman. The man who loves wife and mother and home will respect and revere all womanhood. He is always the better citizen for such gentle breeding. The home over which the trusted wife presides is the citadel of our strength, the best guaranty of good citizenship and the sound moral of government. It is the foundation—upon it all else is constructed. From the plain American home, where virtue dwells and truth abides, go forth the men and women who make the greatest states and cities which adorn our Republic, which maintain law and order; that citizenship which aims at the public welfare, the common good of all. Some one has said that women mold the future as mothers, and govern as wives. I congratulate you on what woman has done for grand and noble objects in the past. I rejoice with you at the broader field of the present and the splendid vista of the future which is everywhere opening for you.

"I again thank you for your presence here and for this manifestation of your regard and good will. Mrs. McKinley and I will be most happy to meet you and greet you, one and all."
