One of the most serious defects in the lost art of cheese making. This art should be restored and it would family that could afford to keep a is a myth and a phantasy. few cows or goats. There are no more wholesome or appetizing articles of food than home made cheeses. Indeed the finest cheeses that command the highest prices for the tables of the epicures are those made after the fashions of the peasantry of Germany, Holland and France. The renowned fromage de brie is a village product which every farmer's wife can make in the section where it takes its name. Our New England grandmothers and our parents if they happen to be of European descent know all about domestic cheese making, and it is high time this industry were revived, unless we are going to run to the grocery store for every mouthful we put on our family tables. The nearer a family can come to supplying the kitchen larder with the staples of jood, the nearer they will be on the road to competer ce. In one family the belief that, should an internain this city the young ladies have tional bimetallic agreement admit taken up the art as handed down to gold and silver to free coinage at a them by their mother and they are producing an article that is a delicacy fixed basis, as in fact it was mainand finds ready sale among those who tained during nearly three-quarters know how to prize a pure cream of a century in spite of the extreme cheese, uncolored and unadulterated. The daughters of Mr. J. Morlock are making and selling a very fine article of home made cheese. The art to 1820 silver yielded 75 per cent and should be introduced into every family | gold 25 cent only of the total value of that has a large table to supply. The domestic cheese making may seem to some like a small matter but there of agriculture.

How do those Republicans, who voted for McKinley sincerely believng that the Republican platform meant what it said, when it pledged the administration to use its utmost efforts to re-establish Bimetalism, reconcile the conflicting views of Republican platform and Republican leadership? For election purposes the the American household economy is double standard is a good enough Morgan to catch the Silver Republican voters. The utterances of politicians aside, the world's gold and silver coinage exists today in almost perfectly equal amounts as expressed in dollars. According to the treasury circular of July 1, 1896, the whole world's coinage of gold was $4,068,800,000; of silver $4,-070,500,000. The average ratio of this coinage is about 15 and one-half, not 32 to 1, or 33 to 1, as Harvey Scott says is the only possible ratio. Bi metalism at his ratio would send our coins to the melting pots of other countries, no ratio would be safe for our country but 16 to 1.

But to the question whether there ever was practical Bimetalism. We pitt against Harvey Scott the statement of the historical facts about it from the chairman of the Holland delegation at the conference of 1892:

"We in Holland are unanimous in fixed ratio, the union between the two metals would be maintained on a variations in the production of gold and silver, respectively, which took place in that period.
