JOURNAL "X-RAYS."

The Statesman is informed now and for all time that flax fibre is not on the inside of the stem. That is the pith.

A West Salem woman, while bathing on the shaded beaches of the Willamette at that summer resort lost her false teeth in the river. Editor Fletcher has been seen diving for them a number of times and it is believed he has got away with the lady's teeth. It is bad to rob the county as the Statesman does, but to steal a woman's teeth!

The goggle-eyed, low-browed, freckled-faced, grinning reporter of the Salem Statesman at Newport is not crazy. It requires some intellect to go crazy and he will never be afflicted.

It is reported Senator McBride has changed his residence from Columbia county to Salem, so as to control the postoffice at the Capital City. By senatorial courtesy, the appointment goes to the senator where he resides.

Sherwood Burr, Eugene, Or., presents a wholesome object lesson about "foreign" capital in following advertisement:

Of course; a fool Populist wouldn't know any better than to publish how much cash there was in the state treasury at least semi-annually as the law plainly requires the State Treasurer to do. The Populist treasurer of Marion county voluntarily publishes a financial statement once a month. If he were state treasurer he'd do the same. But State Treasurer Metschan is too wise a man to do such a reckless thing as that. He believes in the greatest secrecy in such a matter as the peoples cash.

Coal Miners and Operators Submit Propositions.

PITTSBURG, Aug 24.—Miners to resume work at the 54 cent rate pending a decision of a board of arbitration.

Miners to resume work at an intermediate rate between the rates demanded and the one paid before the suspension, pending a decision of a board of arbitration.

Miners to resume operations without a price named pending a decision of a board of arbitration.

These three propositions were submitted by the special committee of railroad coal operators of the Pittsburg district at a conference held tonight.

Miners to resume work at the 69-cent rate pending the decision of a board of arbitration.

This is the proposition submitted by the officers of the miners to the special committee. The propositions were talked over in informal manner by both sides, when adjournment was taken until today. The operators hope that one of their propositions will be accepted while, the miners' officials say they will not recede in the least from the position they have taken. President Dolan, after the conference, said that all were going to take a good sleep, and he was satisfied they would come to some definite understanding within 10 minutes after meeting in the morning.

FLAX.

The Crop Is Being Harvested

The Very Finest Fibre Can Be Grown in Oregon.

It has been conclusively demonstrated that flax can be successfully raised in Oregon. While this industry is still in its primitive state, yet within a few years it will figure as one of the principal industries in the Northwest. The crop this year is purely an experiment in most instances, but the experiment having proven a profitable one, flax will be grown on a more extensive scale in the future in this state, and especially in the Willamette valley.

Monday afternoon a JOURNAL reporter called at the old mill just north of the large brick mills on North Front street, where he found W. E. Mitchell busy receipting for loads of flax and superintending the preparation of the same for the scutching mills. Mr. Mitchell superintends all the preparatory work, while J. S. Currie a flax expert of Michigan, and recently from Ireland, has been engaged to superintend the final processes of manufacture, which will begin as soon as the machinery can be placed in operation.

Mr. Mitchell reports 125 acres of flax raised in Marion county alone this year. A large quantity was also raised in Clackamas county and in the southern part of the state, so the output from this state for the first year will indeed be quite large. From the fact that the entire crop had not yet been harvested Mr. Mitchell was unable to estimate with reasonable accuracy, the yield in this state. The returns thus far indicate an average yield of 2 to 2½ tons per acre. The flax thus far received has been quite uniform in length, from 36 to 40 inches and averaging possibly 39 inches. The crop was not planted until the latter part of May this year or there is no question but the stalks would have attained a height of from 4 to 6 feet. The seed should be planted early in April, the ground for which should be prepared in the fall. Returns have not yet been received from the Chemawa Indian school, the the Lake Labish country nor from the asylum where several acres were devoted to raising flax.

Owing to a lack of facilities at the brick mills, the management has found it necessary to prepare the greater part of the product for the scutching mill just east of the state penitentiary.

The process of harvesting the flax crop and converting the same into garments is an interesting one, When the leaves begin to fall from the stalk and the stalk begins to turn yellow, it is time to pull the crop. It is allowed to lay upon the ground for about twenty four hours when it is formed into small sheaves and shocked in the same manner as wheat. The flax is then gathered and placed in a retting pond where, by a process of fermentation, the fibre is loosened from the straw. It is necessary for the flax to remain in the retting pond from five to 8 days, depending altogether on the temperature of the water. The bundles are then removed from the pond and are unbound and the stalks are scattered about on the ground where they remain untill thoroughly well dried. The flax is then rebundled and stored ready for the scutching mill.

The machinery for the scutching mill is now in Portland and is daily expected to arrive in Salem when the work of further preparing the flax for manufacturing purposes will be continued.

The stalks are first put through the "breaks," a succession of various sized rollers, by which the fiber is thoroughly separated from the straw. The fibre is then ready for the scutching mill. The promoters of this industry in this state do not expect to be able to have a scutching mill placed in operation this year. The fiber will this year be shipped to spinning mills in Ireland, and New York, for which large orders have already been received. Next year it is quite likely that a spinning mill will be placed in operation at Salem and all kinds of fine linen, crashes, twines, etc. will be manufactured. A machine will be received from California also by which all waste and refuse will be utilized. The same will be converted into surgeon's lint or absorbing cotton so widely used by surgeons, in surgical operations.

While the flax industry in Oregon is still in its primitive state, yet in the harvesting and preparation of this years crop for the scutching mill, employment is afforded 14 men. When a mill has been established here work will be furnished for between fifty and sixty people.

Flax cannot be grown on the same ground two years in succession but when grown alternately with what, oats or barley, a good yield may be expected. Flax absorbs certain properties of the soil and at the same time leaves other properties, conducive to successful grain raising.

Oregon Pears in New York.

They Break the Record and Touch the Top of the Market.

"One carload of Salem, Oregon, "R. S. W." sold today in this city for $2.15 a box—the highest price reached this year. That was not for common pears, but for the famous R. S. Wallace orchard at Salem.

A carload of common Oregon pears sold in Chicago for $1.25 a box today. The freight on pears to New York is nearly $1.00 a box, leaving the grower over a dollar and fifteen cents a box at Salem, less cost of packing.

This sale today is a great credit to Salem and a high feather in the cap of Oregon as the fruit Klondike of the Northwest.

HE DON'T LIKE TRAMPS.—There is at least one boy in Salem who is not fond of tramps especially when they make themselves too familiar. When Antone Metschan came down stairs this morning and entered the kitchen, he unexpectedly encountered a "knight of the road" whom he heroically kicked down the back steps. The tramp had gained access to the kitchen through a back door that had been left unlocked. Throughout today, Tony has been the recipient of many compliments from his many friends for the bravery he displayed this morning.
