A HERO OF OREGON.

[Continued from first page.] California east to Texas, is Mexican soil. A modern telegraph line is an unheard of thing anywhere. John. Tyler is president, and the Ashburton treaty is being negotiated. With a last farewell to his wife and bis missionary comrades, Whitman and one companion, A. L. Lovejoy, mount their horses for the long ride.

Eleven days later Whitman and Lovejoy ride into Fort Hall, 340 miles from Walltatpu. They have followed the Indian trail all the way. Capt-Grant is the commander at Fort Hall, and he knows Whitman only too well. Grant was put there to keep out immigration from the states. The Hudson Bay Company wanted to keep that region to trap in. Little did they care for civilization. There was more money in furs. And so Capt Grant had on hard a choice supply of the most direful stories of deserts and disaster with which to turn aside Intending immigrants to the Califormia hills and valleys. He had tried them all on Whitman six years Whitman, and shrewdly suspects that some mission of no good to British interests calls the sturdy ploneer to attempt a journey, to Washington in the face of the Western winter of bilizzard and famine.
