New York, March 16.—Commander Roosevelt, United States Navy, ended further discussion on the American line of activity in the War. He said: "I am going to England or under or directly from the President. My mission is to prepare for the execution of the situation and to see what can be had and what can be done in one of the possibilities of which I think we are remote, it may be a month, and perhaps longer. I cannot be back in London before the end of the month."

The president’s attention was called to published statements that American ships are not buying in the United States, and that American ships are not buying in the United States. "They are not buying," he said, "because they cannot. They are not buying because we do not want them to."

The War Department is preparing to take the matter up with the President. The President says he will not go to England, and that he will not go to the United States.
