

EXCHANGE.

Details of How It Was Made.

Heroes of the Merrimac Again Free.

Exchange Is Effected Before the Doomed City.

One Spanish Lieutenant and Fifteen Privates Paid the Ransom.

OFF JURAGUA, July 6, by Associated Press dispatch boat, via Kingston, 10 a. m., July 7.—Naval Constructor Richmond P. Hobson, of the flagship New York, and the seven seamen who sailed the collier Merrimac into the channel of the harbor of Santiago de Cuba, June 3d, and sunk her there, were surrendered today by the Spanish military authorities in exchange for prisoners captured by the American forces.

Hobson and his men were escorted through the lines by Captain Chadwick, of the New York. Every step of the journey was marked by the wildest demonstration. The American soldiers, threw aside all semblance of order, scrambled out of the entrenchments and knocked over tents and guns and other camp paraphernalia in their eagerness to see the returning heroes and sent cheer after cheer after the men who sailed into the jaws of death to serve their country. The same scenes of enthusiasm were repeated on the arrival at the hospital station and Juragua.

Hobson, who reached there in advance of his comrades, was taken on board the New York immediately. The flagship's deck was lined with officers and men as he climbed up the side and stepped on board the vessel with shouts and cheers he and his comrades were recognized by the crews in the transports lying near the New York. Hobson had little to say regarding his experience, excepting that he was well treated by the Spaniards. All his men are in excellent health.

The Spanish authorities consented to exchange Hobson and his men, and a truce was established for that purpose. The place selected for the exchange was under a tree between the Spanish and American lines, and two-thirds of a mile beyond the entrenchments occupied by the Rough Riders, near General Wheeler's headquarters, the center of the American line. The American prisoners left the Reina Mercedes hospital at 2:45 this afternoon in charge of Major Iries, the Spanish staff officer. The prisoners were conducted to the meeting place about, not blindfolded.

Colonel John Jacob Astor and Lieutenant Milloy were in charge of the Spanish prisoners. These consisted of Lieutenant Amelio Volez and Aurelius, a German, belonging to the Twenty-ninth regular infantry, who was captured at El Guayco Friday last, Lieutenant Adolph Aries, of the first provisional regiment of Barcelona, fourteen non-commissioned officers and one private. The Spanish troops were taken through the American lines, mounted and blindfolded.

The meeting was extremely courteous and very formal, and no attempt was made on either side to discuss anything but the matter in hand. Iries was given the choice of three lieutenants in exchange for Hobson, and also informed that he could have all fifteen men exchanged for the American sailors. The Spanish officers selected Lieutenant Aries. The other Spanish officers were conducted back to Juragua, and then not later than 4 o'clock Iries courteously enough, but in a tone which indicated considerable defiance, said:

"Our understanding is, gentlemen that this truce comes to an end at 5 o'clock." Colonel Astor looked at his watch, bowed at the Spanish officer without making any reply and started slowly back to the American lines with Hobson and his companions.

The meeting and exchange of prisoners had taken place in full view of both the American and Spanish soldiers entrenched near the meeting place. The keenest interest was taken in the occasion.

The escort from the flagship had brought a change of clothing and new uniforms for Hobson and all of his men, and they were given a short respite to change their apparel.

Before leaving for the coast, Lieutenant Hobson had an interview with General Shafter.

To the correspondent of the Associated Press, Hobson declined to talk of his adventure on the Merrimac, stating that he must first make his report to Admiral Sampson, but as to his experience in Santiago he said:

"During the first four days we were prisoners of war, and were confined in Moro castle, and I assure you that these were extremely uncomfortable and disagreeable days. The Spaniards did not exactly ill-treat us, but it took them some time to recover from the shock, caused by what most of them considered our Yankee impudence in trying to blockade their harbor. As a rule the officers and men, who came into contact with us, were gruff in speech and sullen in manner. For Admiral Cervera I have nothing but the highest admiration. His action, in informing Admiral Sampson of our safety, I regard as that of a kind-hearted, generous man, and a chivalrous officer. He repeatedly spoke to me of his admiration for what he called one of the most daring acts in naval history, though I am sure we were not entitled to the commendation we received, for there were hundreds of other men in our ships who would have been glad to undertake to do the same thing."

"While we were in Moro Castle, we were naval prisoners, but at the end of four days we were transferred to the jurisdiction of the army, and were removed to the Reina Mercedes hospital on the outskirts of Santiago, where we remained until yesterday. We knew but little of what was going on in the city, though, of course, we could always tell when our fleet was bombarding the shore batteries, and we could easily distinguish the terrific explosions by the Vesuvius throwing dynamite shells."

"Several times at night we were also fully aware that land batteries were fighting outside the city. The little information the Spaniards would give us could not be relied upon."

"One thing that I found out in the hospital, was that a large number of Spanish officers were wounded in Friday's fight, for many were brought to the hospital to be treated. Numbers of badly aimed bullets came into the hospital windows on Friday, but I do not believe any one was injured by them. Our quarters there were very clean and comfortable, and the food was fairly good."

"In fact, I have no reason to complain of our treatment as prisoners of war. The prejudice which the Spaniards showed against us during the first few days soon wore away. We conducted ourselves properly, and simply forced them to treat us well."

Prof. Grant Chesterfield, the noted pianist, has added a number of important to his extraordinary collection of palmographs since his stay in town, and among the number is that of a certain young lady whose hand denotes a career most flattering at least that is what Chesterfield said.

The young lady in question is now studying hard, turning her gifts toward literature and if Chesterfield's predictions and the hope of her numerous friends are realized she certainly will move in brilliance.

Prof. Chesterfield tells you what you are best fitted for. Whether or not there are certain changes in store for you: If your present troubles will soon cease. How A. Cooper Had a Rotten Bone Healed After 35 Years.

CHEERFUL, Wash., April 9, 1898.

I received your letter and was glad to hear from you. You want to know how my leg is getting along. It is all right; the flesh is growing out over the shin bone and is turning white. It is not straight yet, but I think it will be as straight as the other leg when warm weather comes on. I can work most of the time. The other doctors told me I could never be cured without splitting it and scraping the bone, but they are mistaken. It is getting well without cutting or scraping, so that I do not know as much as they thought they did, but you are all right, for you have done just what you said you could do. I will answer any questions you ask about my leg. Very truly yours,

A. COOPER.
