Wonderful Little Paloma,

A very competent Salem musical critic has written the following estl-mate for THE JOURNAL: "It was the event of a lifetime to many who were present. That a child of such tender years was able to interpret the Masters in such a charming and artistic manner was a surprise to all. Her intelligent comprehension of her numbers, and her beautiful face, served to deepen the profound impression on the audince. As one looked over the program before her appearance it seemed an impossibility that one so young should be

No more startling or revolting crime could have been committed than the murder of the empress of Austria. Not since Marie Antoinette was sent to the guillotine has there been a crime more apt to awaken that sentiment of chivalric pity and Indignation to which, on the earlier occasion, Burke gave expression in words that are likely to be remembered as long as the English language endures. Now, as then, a queen has been chosen for murder because she was a queen beloved by all her people, It is scarcely conceivable, says a writer to the Harpers Weekly, that an Austrian or a Hungarian, even an anarchist, could have been found to raise his dagger against the beloved Elizabeth, who was beloved of all her people, so as to saye waste in cutting. she awoke with a start. She dreamed that when the band on the dial of the clock should point to the third hour of morning she would die. Often she had suffered sured the audience that no part of the program would fail of successful interpretation. Her own compositions excited the greatest interest. Her improvisation on the theme handed in by Clifford White Kantner was a marked manifestation of her genius.

Owing to the superior excellence of her rendition of the entire program it would be difficult to single out any particular selection. Her own compositions against the Italian are against the Italian agonies and wished for death, but now—it was so sudden, so near, so very near! In that moment life became inexpressibly dear. How long had she to live? With a cry she sprang from her bed and ran to the clock. It lacked ten minutes of three. Only a few minutes more of life! With frenzied haste she grasped the hand of the clock and pushed it back, back from the fateful number. Then she stopped and allows swooned—but no, the tick of the clock should not make a coward of her.
