Text Book Trust.

A Prominent Educator Says It is Trying to Fool the People.

He Says That the Trust Wishes the Impression to Get Out That It is in Favor of the Daily Measure.

The first scrap over the bill to revise the school laws took place when the bill was up for reference. The committee on education composed of Senators Kykendall, Harmon and Porter demanded that the bill be sent to their committee.

This committee is composed of three Republicans and it remains to be seen whether the Republican pledge to emancipate Oregon from the hands of the text-book trust will be carried out or not. There is a large majority in the Senate for the bill to repeal the present trust law.

"The false cry of 'wolf' has been started in reference to the Daily school bill," says a well known Portland educator.

"I talked with several members of the legislature who stayed in Portland Sunday, and they seemed imbued with the idea that some book trust was backing the Daily bill. It is to the interest of book trusts to have that impression gain ground. The corporation which is playing such an important part in the school affairs of the state wishes to throw legislators and the people off the scent by starting a false cry against a bill which is inimical to its interests.

"The Daily bill shows on the face of it that it is in the interest of no corporation, as it provides means for fair and impartial competition to all book concerns alike. It is a well-known fact that most of the legislators are hostile to any sort of a bill which will give any particular book trust a cinch on the text books, and for this reason the book trust is making use of this very hostility to raise the cry of 'wolf,' against the Daily bill.

"The book trust is ready to adopt any measures to draw attention away from itself. It expected little trouble in getting an indorsement for its bill, known as the 'Fatherless Bill for Portland Only' of the majority of the school superintendents, but the exposure of its plans at that meeting headed it off for the time.

"Some of the members seem to understand that the teachers of the state, and particularly of Portland, have a wholesome fear of losing their positions if they should in any way displease the book trust. They, therefore, wisely hold their counsel. When once a clear understanding is reached the book trust and its allies will be officially silenced, if not knocked out entirely by a blow delivered squarely between the eyes."
