THE LONDON DAILY MAIL PRINTS the following dispatch from Odessa:

While journeying north from Lydiya, Emperor Nicholas, during a halt for luncheon at Tula, capital of the government of the same name, in Central Russia, sent a delicately worded message expressing his desire to see Count Leo Tolstoy. Contrary to expectation, Tolstoy accepted the invitation, and soon appeared at the railway station.

In the peasant's garb he presented a striking contrast to the richly dressed entourage of the czar. Emperor Nicholas kissed him on the mouth on both cheeks, Tolstoy readily responding. Then a conversation commenced, the czar asking his guest for an opinion upon the imperial proposal for the limitation of armaments. Count Tolstoy replied that he could only believe in it when his majesty should set the example to other nations. On the czar mentioning the difficulties of the problem, and the necessity for united action of the great powers, the count softened somewhat and expressed the hope that his majesty would be able to attain some definite results, or, at any rate, to formulate some workable plan at the conference. The czar, thanking him for his good wishes, said he would be pleased if Tolstoy could be induced to lend his genius to the solution of the question, and the count rejoined that the emperor might count upon his co-operation, for he was already engaged upon a work dealing with the question in point, which would soon see the light.
