Traced By a Knife.

From the London Telegraph.

"A friend of mine," said my new client, a prepossessing young woman neatly dressed in black, "is in terrible trouble, and I want your assistance to help him."

"Tell me the story," I said briefly.

"You have heard of the Smatters murder. Well, I am Miss Middleton, to whom Mr. Smatters was said to be engaged. I manage a milliner 's shop at Bloxover for my mother. Mr. Smatters was the son of a farmer in the neighborhood. About a year ago I became engagdd to him.

"At last the thought of marrying Mr. Smatters became unbearable to me, and I determined to break off the engagement. Smatters was very angry when I told him, and accused me of playing him false for the sake of Dr. Austin, and he became so violent that the, doctor who happened to be passing, came into the shop.

"There was an altercation between the two, and the doctor became so angry at the way in which Smatters abused and threatened me that he threw him out of the shop and threatened to thrash him into a jelly if he showed his face in it again.

"Two days afterwards Smatters was found murdered, as you know. Well, then it seemed that some people had heard the quarrel and Dr. Austin's threats to Smatters, and they were wicked enough to take it for granted that the two had met again and quarreled over me. But to show you the wicked untruth this is, the doctor on the night when the murder was committed spent the evening at our house."

"I suppose that there are plenty of witnesses to that—yourself, your mother and the servant—"

"Unluckily, no," she replied, with a much perturbed countenance. "The maid let him in, but we always send her to bed early, and I let him out. Unfortunately, too, the doctor had told his servant not to wait up for him, and let himself in with his latchkey, as was his usual custom."

"If I remember right, he was arrested on suspicion, but the magistrates held that there was not sufficient evidence against him to justify his detention."

"Yes, but the place believes him guilty and he is ruined in his character and profession. I have told those wretched people again and again that there was no reason why he should kill Smatters. I told old Jackson so—"

"Who is old Jackson?"

"Smatters' uncle—who was devoted to him—and he has been most bitter against the doctor—he nearly had a fit when I told him that I had broken off my engagement with his nephew and was engaged to the doctor, so that the latter could not have any motive for killing Smatters."

I went down to Bloxover in the character of a clerk on a holiday, and I soon became intimate with a variety of odd people.

My theory of the fight had to give way to further information. It seemed that Smatters had been struck down from behind by some heavy weapon. It also appeared that public opinion disbelieved Miss Middleton's statement that she had broken with Smatters and was engaged to Austin.

The body had been found in a lane, where it had fallen at the foot of the stile which led to a short cut to the farm. As I noted the surroundings I could not help forming certain conclusions. Also, after poking and prying for a long time, I made a discovery. This was a common horn-handled pocket-knife, which had fallen in the grass.

In the evening I went privately to see Miss Middleton. She was not in, but I saw her mother instead.

"I suppose," I said, "that a pretty girl like your daughter must have other admirers besides these two."

"La!" she said with a laugh, "if I was to go through the list of all my daughter's admirers I should talk for hours. Why the curate, Mr. Newson, and Mr. Jackson, poor Smatters' uncle -but there, I am forgetting—I mustn't talk about that."

"Mustn't talk about what? You observe that I am your daughter's confidential agent specially retained, so you can do no harm by telling me."

"La! so you are," said the talkative dame, "and a good bit of money I reckon it will cost. Well, you see, Mr. Jackson proposed to my daughter before Smatters did, but when she refused him he begged her not to tell any one about it, and she has not told any but me. Everybody knows that Smatters and his uncle were the best of friends and companions. But I have often thought I should like to know what Jim Baldock was doing on that night."

"Who is Jim Baldock?"

"A wild, ne'er-weel of a horse dealer, who's half gypsy, I suspect. He proposed to Alice, and when she refused him he told her he would kill any man who should win her. That was his savage way.

"Why wasn't he arrested on suspicion?"

"O, I don't know. Perhaps because it was more than a year ago and he hasn't been here since. Perhaps because no one knew of the threat."

It seemed to me now that the results of my investigation pointed surely to one conclusion, but I doubted whether I had sufficient evidence to induce a magistrate to issue a warrant. I determined, therefore, to act in a strictly illegal manner, I got a boy to take notes to John Jackson, the uncle of the murdered man, and Sawyer, the butcher, asking them to come in in the evening—for the co-operation of both was needful to the success of my scheme. The boy brought word that they would come.

When Mr. Jackson arrived I began to explain to him that I had a new idea with regard to the murder of his nephew.

"Go right ahead," he said. "Not but what I am certain that the hand which struck down my poor boy is that of the man who robbed him of his love."

"In the first place, it seemed to me," I continued, "after a careful survey of the scene of the murder, that the deceased must have been struck down just as he was about to climb the stile. From the stile he could have seen both ways down the lane, and must have heard the slightest footstep.

"Now, a man of violent temper like your nephew hearing a footstep and seeing an enemy would certainly not have turned his back on him and commenced to climb over the stile. Therefore I deduced the conclusion that the murderer was one whom the deceased was on good terms with, so that the villian could come up right behind his victim without exciting any suspicion."

"Very curious and interesting piece of argument," said Mr. Jackson dryly, "but I don't see how it will help us to lay our hands on the man."

"Well, then, secondly, I found out that there was a man who had been rejected by Miss Middleton, and who might have thought that if Smatters were killed his chance might be improved. I learned also that when this man heard that the engagement had been broken off he nearly had a fit."

A certain set look began to imprint itself on Mr. Jackson's face.

"But this is pure conjecture," he said, hoarsely.

"Thirdly, I discovered a pocket-knife lying by the stile, and on the horn handle were rudely scratched the initials 'J. J.' Do you know anyone who owns those initials who was in the confidence of the deceased and was rejected by Miss Middleton?"

"Haven't you inquired?" he snarled. "Anyone could tell you that."

"I haven't inquired. In fact, Mr. Jackson, I have not told a single soul about that knife but yourself."

In that moment he sprang at it—as I had expected.

"Curse you," he cried. "you never shall. Give it up, or I will kill you as I killed him."

At that moment Sawyer rose from behind the sofa, where I had bidden him, and between us we pinioned the murderer.

Dr. Austin soon married the faithful girl who had been instrumental in clearing his character, and his practice prospered in the most satisfactory manner.

"One Good Turn Deserves Another."

It is so easy to go through life doing good and helping to make others happy. A lady who had been ill with a complication of troubles, having been thoroughly cured and now enjoying perfect health, felt it a duty to tell her friends that the specific that brought her back to health was Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Thus, after Hood's had served her well, she felt it deserved a good turn at her hands. Thousands tell the same story of blood purified and health restored. Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses merit peculiar to itself.

Catarrh – "I suffered over six years with catarrh. Spent over $100 in advertised cures, inhalers etc., without benefit. Finally tried Hood's Sarsaparilla and it accomplished a complete and lasting cure." M. A. ABBEY, Victor Ave., Worcester, Mass.

Gastritis – "Nervousness caused by a fright made my wife suffer intensely from gastritis. Morphine was necessary to relieve the suffering. Hood's Sarsaparilla and Hood's Pills were tried after all else failed and in four days she improved and in 14 days she was cured." C. W. T. SCHMIDT, Cedar Falls, Iowa.

Blood Poison – "At 12 I had bone disease and used crutches. Doctor prescribed and wanted to scrape it. My grandfather gave me Hood's Sarsaparilla. After taking four bottles I threw away crutches, am well and go to school." CHARLES CAMPBELL, 1816 Ontario Ave., Niagara Falls, N. Y.

Dizzy Spells – "After the measles my daughter had dizzy spells, which we thought would pass off but they did not until we gave her Hood's Sarsaparilla. In five days they disappeared and in one month she regained her usual health." B. H. KAMPERMECK, 53 Graves Place, Holland, Mich.

Indigestion – "I now have a good appetite, eat well, sleep well and my dyspepsia and indigestion have left me. The reason is I took Hood's Sarsaparilla which entirely cured me. I am Baggage Master on the B. & O. Railroad." THOMAS COLES, 119 Carr St., Sandusky, Ohio.

A Swede in Court.

From New York Life.

It was in a Duluth court, and the witness was a Swede who was perhaps not so stupid as he seemed to be.

The cross-examining attorney was a smart young man, whose object was to disconcert the witness and discredit his testimony.

"What did you say your name was?" Was the first question asked.

"Yahn"—very deliberty—"Peterson."

"John Peterson, eh? Old man Peter's son, I suppose. Well, John, where do you live?"

"Where Ah live? In Dulut."

"Now, Peterson, answer this question care fully. Are you a married man?"

"Ah tank so. Ah was married"

"So you think because you got married you are a married man do you? That's funny. Now, tell the gentlemen of this exceptionally intelligent jury who you marri ."

"Who Ah married. Ah married a woman."

"See here, sir! Don't you know any better than to trifle with this court? What do you mean, sir? You married a woman? Of course you married a woman. Did you ever hear of anyone marrying a man?"

"Yas. Mah sister did"

Children deprived of fats and mineral foods have weak bones, flabby flesh and thin watery blood.

The milk of nursing mothers, enfeebled by chronic diseases, or long continued nursing, produces the same results.

Scott's Emulsion is cod-liver oil partly digested and with the hypophosphites, forms a fat food which acts on the infant through the mother's milk, giving rich blood, strong nerves and sound flesh and bones to both.

How Reed Held Up the Nicaragua Canal.

Thoms B. Reed is a distinguished statesman. He has for years been one of the trusted leaders of the Republican party, contributing during those years perhaps as much as any other man to the success to that party. He is able, conscientious and patriotic. Can the Republican party afford to discredit Mr. Reed? We think not. He represents the conservative element of that party and it is a very considerable element, both as to numbers and intelligence.—Headlight. Whether the supporters of the canal bill belong to either one element or another of the Republican party, or to the Democrat party, they will scarcely credit Mr. Reed with being conscientious since his recent hold-up of the House. That was an act that was satisfactory to but one element of the Republican party, viz: the element that "stands in" with the the transcontinental railroads.—Exchange.
