GOOD WHISKEY AT SALEM.

The Horse Editor Attends Another Classical Concert—His Report.

The initial Oregon performance of Leopold Godowsky, who plays the piano in the Russian, Polish; Hebrew, English, German and Hungarian languages, was given at the First Methodist church, our otherwise excellent opera house has not yet been sufficiently fumigated and cleared of rats to be suitable to the enjoyment of hightoned classical music.

In spite of the tail end of a four days' shower, and the apathy of some ticket holders to sitting out three hours of performance they can't understand, there was a very good attendance. Even people who have not learned to make themselves believe that they chew up Chopin, dine on fugues, or digest a quarter-section of the Goetterdämmerung, came away satisfied with the "technique" of Godowsky (pronounced "Good-Whiskey" with the accent on the fluid.) One thing the horse editor noticed was that this performer, with the most popular and pronounced pig-handle that has ever come to us here in the west from a foreign country, went about his stunts in a thoroughly "musical" manner. He did not go at it as though he was working a wood-saw on a wager, nor as though he was a second helper in a blacksmith shop.

It is also evidence of genius that he keeps a manager who is a piano tuner. The obvious advantage of this over carrying around a house-mover or a slowdancer is another illustration that the great heads turned out of Russia: Poland are teeming with progressive ideas. Godowsky took the audience fully into the comprehensive grasp of his intellect in the way he did the encore fiends to an aluminum finish. His program was in two sections like an overland train and he put each section through on its scheduled time card. At the interludo, or intermezzo, as we critics term the little halt or breathing spell between Section No. 1 and No. 2, the player hesitated a moment to give all to understand what was about to take place. This was the first chance for an indiscriminate outburst of hippopotamus applause and the usual senseless recall simply to lengthen out the program and enable our music-loving people to get two dollars' worth for one. But it didn't work. The encore jabberwock was knocked out by the little cherub-faced Polandier with the intoxicating cognomen whacking right into section two of his program and rushing it "hot off the bat."

He came up on the home stretch a little winded and clamping the bit, posture feeling the results of a week's pasture on dining car grub. He halted a moment before coupling under the wire when the flabbergasted encore fiends broke loose. But Godowsky simply raked up a little, gave his coat-tails a characteristic little flip—they are too short any way for an elevated stage—and played a clean furrow through to the end. One of the best critics in the town tells us it was the familiar, "Ein ladung Zum Tanz," by the renowned Anheuser-Busch-Tausig. But to most of our cultivated people it might have been Dunder and Putz-pause, for all they knew about it. While people, even in the densely populated and most cultured centers of the great wool-growing west, don't exactly get their mouths watering over the Schumann, Schubert, Liszt, Wagner combinations, as a range horse does in a patch of red clover, this second concert in the great classical series was no doubt a success, considering that it was the ton-ton, away-up high C number of the bar ch.

The third concert by the Steindel Co., May 25, will have a harpist and vocalists who will produce popular airs that it is to be hoped even the horse-editor can appreciate.—E. J.

A PIONEER MANSION

Passed by Purchase into the Hands of a Salem Capitalist.
The Geo. H. Jones' property, on South Commercial street, well known to all old residents of Salem, has been purchased by C. W. McNamar from its former owner, Miss Frances Jones.

The house is one of the historic residences of Salem. It was built in 1850, by Geo. H. Jones, O'Donald & Ferguson doing the work, and cost about $11,000. The honest and workmanlike manner in which it was constructed is shown by its excellent condition today, standing as plumb and square on its foundations as it did when it was finished. This used to be one of the finest houses in the capital city and was usually occupied by some of the state officials.

H. B. Holland, of the Salem Milling Co., was its last occupant, and it has lain empty for some time.

In fact it has been empty much of the time of late years and has suffered for want of repairs. It is gratifying to see it pass into the hands of some one who will improve it and do justice to the location which is one of the most desirable in the city.

The price paid is not made public, but Mr. McNamar pays a glowing tribute to the executive ability and persuasive powers of the former owner in inducing him to cough up just a little more than he had intended to. At one time the property was held at $30,000.

The house will be repaired and painted and the grounds put in first-class order by the present owner.

Mr. McNamar is a capitalist who has resided in Salem about a year, coming from Lexington, Neb., where he still has extensive property interests. He visited this section several times before making up his mind to move and make his home here.

He bought the Hugh Thompson property on Center street, where he now resides, but will now proceed to make his latter acquisition over into a home.

THE STATE BOARD

Of Horticulture Concludes Its Sessions at Salem.

The (Marion County Horticultural Society held two successful meetings Tuesday in spite of rain, and the fact that on Monday night there was not a particle of program in sight. None of the county, district or state officials gave the convention very much attention or to be aware of the fact that Salem is the fruit growing center of Oregon. Mrs. Wanda, the rustling woman secretary who gets no pay, and a self-organized local committee did all the advertising and got out a fair crowd. But for their efforts not over a dozen people would have known there was a fruit growers convention in town, and special thanks are due to Oliver Joly, C. B. Irvine, and Jas. M. Kyle.

Preparations should be made by the people of Salem to make the state convention in June a more than local event. It pays to make all these gatherings a success in point of attendance and entertainment.

The State Board of Horticulture completed its two-day session at Salem by electing H. E. Dorsch secretary to succeed John Minto and arranging for a state convention at Salem in June. L. T. Reynolds was appointed treasurer and 1500 copies of the Morton law were ordered printed. Mr. Dorsch will move the secretary's office to Portland.

STATE MEETING JUNE 9-10.
The June meeting of the state board of horticulture will be held in Salem. It is intended to devote this meeting very largely to the question of marketing fruit, and strenuous efforts will be made to have prominent men here from California and other states where fruit marketing has been reduced to a science. Oregon growers are urged to study the situation closely in the interim. It is noted that some effective organization may be made and a plan of action adopted.

The new president and secretary are planning "big things" in the way of future conventions and it is to be hoped they will materialize, as those who get the swag ought certainly to furnish some of the entertainment for the producer.

Among the papers to be presented, and the men to be present, will be: Friday, 2 p. m.—The reports of special committee on co-operation in marketing. H. B. Miller, organization in California; L. E. Reynolds, organization in Northwestern states; Emile Schanno, organization in Southeastern states; E. B. Lake, organization in Oregon.

Friday evening—Welcome address, Governor Geer, response, President Miller, lecture, Prof. E. S. Goff, of Wisconsin.
Saturday, 10 a. m.—Reports from organizations in Hood River, Lane county, Vancouver, Marion and Yamhill societies.
Saturday, 2 p. m.—Talks by prominent horticulturists from California.
Saturday evening—A strawberry festival, with toasts and music.
