Pair of glasses I ever looked through with which I saw in the distance is a remark I hear every few days when fitting glasses. It's not because I have the only glasses that happened to fit, but because I have the latest scientific instruments for testing and measuring the eyesight. I have devoted hard work and study to prepare myself for this kind of work. I believe that you give your glasses that are an absolute fit. Let me fit your next pair of glasses and I will promise to make you thoroughly satisfied.

ST. MARY'S ACADEMY.

Graduating Exercises at a Favorite Pioneer Educational Institution.

The graduating program at the Academy of the Sacred Heart opened with a national air by twelve hands on three pianos, to either accompaniment, and the immortal Star Spangled Banner was sung by a chorus of about forty girls.

This was a splendid effort, greeted with applause. Next came the "Boating Song" by 18 boys with piano and guitar accompaniment. The boys sang with strong clear voices and good time and expression. We feel sure if our board of Education could have heard the boys they would want to have vocal music in the public schools.

An instrumental solo, E. Nevin, op. 13, on three pianos, was followed by 18 minims with dolls who sang "Bye-Bye Land" in a very sweet manner.

The Cecilia orchestra, composed of three guitars, two mandolins, and three pianos now rendered a selection and was loudly applauded.

The cantata "Flora's Festival" was now presented by eight girls wearing a mortar board caps and waving each a flag, followed by eight flower girls who dance and sing and try to choose a queen. In the second scene the flag and flower drills and marching were very pretty. "Oh those happy days of childhood, they will never come again" was a chorus that touched the hearts of the large audience. The queen is finally awarded to Charity disguised as a beggar child, whose cause is espoused by the fairy and when her torn dress is thrown off she is disclosed in royal robes, and crowned in great state by the Princess Good Will.

Next came a recitation in concert by the class in elocution by ten young ladies, "Building the Colossus." Every word was clear, every gesture perfect, and if encourers were permitted at the academy they would have been obliged to respond to a recall. "Till We Meet Again" was then sung as a solo with either obligato and chorus.

Miss Nellie Derby of Salem was now presented with a diploma of graduation. The name was awarded to Anna G. Dickenson of Gervais. The presentation was made by Rev. Wm. Daly, who also proceeded to make a happy address, and in turn introduced Rev. Dillman of Astoria, under whose pastorate at Salem the academy was founded.

The old Masonic temple, which stood where Dr. Richardson's house now stands, was purchased to open this school that had now grown to these noble proportions. He said it was fitting that the first educational impressions of youth should be imparted at the hands of Women, and paid a high tribute to the labors of the mothers and sisters in educational work.

In travelling over the state he had met with the first pupils of the Salem Academy as prominent citizens and in the highest social position and their sons were today on the battlefield fighting for our country. His eloquent

Don't Swear

If you're one of the faithful ones who have waited—patiently or impatiently—for a Tribune. Just read the following local note from the Cycle Age of June 15.

Embarrassed With Too Many Orders.

Factory reports almost unanimously state that so far at least as quantitative orders and production capacity are concerned, this has been an unusually good season in nearly all branches of bicycle and allied industries. From the Black Mt. Co. of Erie, Pa., there comes the announcement that it will find it necessary to turn the factory all night in order to supply the unusual demand for the Tribune bicycle this year. This is an almost unprecedented order for the Tribune plant. It has been operated day and night since last February, the Black Mt. plant has been unable to keep ahead of the tide of orders. It is still fully thirty days behind and for two months past has found it imperative to decline, however reluctantly, all orders from new trade.

We have definite news that our last lot is now sold.
