A SALEM WOMAN

Takes Up and Analyzes Rev. Kantner On Christian Science.

The Lady Turns the Salary Question Very Neatly On the Reverend Gentleman.

EDITOR JOURNAL:—The poor Christian Scientists! They have been getting it from all hands and sources. The trouble seems to have been precipitated by their having a traveling lecturer speak at the Reed. The lecture was free and no one asked to contribute a cent towards defraying the expense.

A couple of days later "Cosmos" in a lengthy article reviewed the lecture and then considered them as a people, and even went to their church to "see" what they did. Had he gone to "learn" would he have reached a different conclusion? Does prejudice in any way appear in his article? Is the personal attack, on a woman, many? He claims a fair and unbiased expression of opinion. I am personally acquainted with Mr. COSMOS and know of his endless investigations in "spiritualism, mesmerism, etc., and feel some surprise at the lack of an impartial spirit, an unprejudiced mind, a thinker's investigation, a genuine effort to get at the truth of the matter, usually found in a profound and deep investigator.

Then "ROBERT JACKSON" saw fit to call attention to the good and bad points, and succeeded only in a limited degree. Then a good and watchful minister or two found it expedient to speak on the matter of Christian Science. Yet the most striking effort in this line was produced by the Congregational minister, Rev. Kantner—a full text of his discourse having been published in the daily papers.

This communication would not have been so long delayed, but in the hope of some abler effort by some one else, I have waited thus long.

I am not a Christian Scientist myself, but have some belief left, even after reading carefully the lecture of Rev. Kantner, that there are two sides even to this question.

I do not attempt to criticize the gentleman's lecture, but desire to call attention to a few leading points, claiming thereby to show, at least to some degree, the address quite illogical in the matter of common practical reasoning. No effort will be made to cover the full text, but only a few points are touched.

Much stress and careful computation of figures were given to show it was money that rules the practitioner in Christian Science, and not the love of God or fellow man, and all this in direct violation of the teaching of the Bible, wherein it is commanded to go forth and preach into the world without price.

Now in this case the Christian Science doctor heals both sickness and sin for a consideration, we will say. The Orthodox minister heals one of sin (but not sickness) also for a consideration. The Bible teaches both of these disciples to heal without price. Yet, neither do? Why? The answer is self evident that every one has to live, and while the money is not considered as a special price put on the services rendered, it must be had by both of those disciples if they expect to live and enjoy any comfort of life, and fit themselves to go forth and preach into the world. If it is the proper thing for one to draw salary why not for both? Since both are working for and from their individual understanding of the same verse in the Bible. Yet the salaried lecturer objects to any one else preaching a different interpretation of the Bible for a price, as it at once shows money the immediate object and aim. The difference of opinion as to a collection of vaguely translated words should not make one disciple uncharitable towards another. Jesus not only cleansed the sinner but he healed the sick. Why is it wrong for the Christian Science doctors to try to use the same divine manner of healing the sick that Jesus did, in addition to healing the sinner, as the other man does? Is an attempt to make man Godlike, ungodly? Most men attempt to make God, manlike. In this "great and progressing nation of Americans" if one man heals sin for $500 a year and another heals sin and sickness too for the same price, which is the one more likely to be patronized? It cannot be said with any truth that the first one is any more certain in result than the second. In fact everything goes to show the second is composed of old and tried followers of the first, which must once more mark the Americans as a progressive and thinking race.

Speaking of money, has the eminent divine ever heard of the circumstances surrounding the financial matter of building the costly Mother church at Boston, by the Scientists? The average church member knows how heavy the debts of the church hang over them, in salaries, etc., yet, were money, the real object of the Christian Scientists, one cannot suppose the response to the call (and only ONE at that) for money would have been so great and noticeable as to attract the attention of a nation. Subscriptions were refused time and time again. I saw this in a newspaper. It is possible as was intimated in the lecture, some of these people may have labored under a mistaken conception of the cause, but surely not all of several million now in this country are not so utterly deluded as to not know how to take care of that greatest of American Gods, MONEY.

If these progressive people hadn't thought the cause sufficient all that money would have been invested in bicycles, probably.

What of the millions who have been healed? Why was no reference made to this? Is it the desire to set aside any or all the good there may be in C. S.? The illustration used of the sickboy who wanted some water and was refused is not a logical citation any more than to judge all ministers by one. To strike the nail sharply, would the reverend divine desire, himself, that all occupying the same pulpit from which this very address was delivered to be judged by those who have formerly occupied it? I sincerely hope not.

It is a notorious fact that infidels take a segment or fragment from the bible and apply some new interpretation and thus patch up an argument against Christianity. If taken with the balance of the Bible it might go all right, but taken alone it is susceptible to distortion. Now, that is what is done in this lecture. I am informed on pretty good authority that some of those citations are not absolutely correct. Yet the ministers all talk about this matter of attacking the Bible, and that it is not a logical nor reputable method.

The most striking feature, probably, of Rev. Kantner's sermon was the tribute to a woman, the author of Science and Health, Mary Baker G. Eddy, coming as it did from a professing minister of the gospel and a Christian. She is quoted as desiring to be a "Jesus." In fact she declines consultation, and so on, that any possible failure to prove her otherwise than what she is may be eliminated. Can this be true of a woman whose name has been before the thinking masses of the world for the past 30 years, and whose character, attainments and virtues have been so highly spoken of, even by the press? No true woman can desire such a life of conflict as Mrs. Eddy has encountered without deep devotion to a good cause. And so it is charged she not only wants to be a "Jesus" but she wants to own a book monopoly. One Bible company ought to be enough.

But, why this address at all? No warfare, so far as I have seen, has been made by the Scientists on the churches. They do not even, as I am told, solicit members. They pay their debts and mind their own business as their traveling lecturer at the Reed told them to do. Is it not possible that soul-satisfying spiritual food pounded out of the much worn pulpit, is of so very unsatisfactory a quality that the masses are turning to something they think better? Judging from the arguments brought to bear one would certainly be entitled to have such a fear.

The divine said he is not a Christian Scientist because he is a Christian. Does the reverend gentleman call that address a Christianly effort? Does he consider it a fair sample? His comparison of the Christian Science women of the city to the Mormons was not even up to the standard of Christianity one usually gets in the churches nowadays, and for that defect of quality in his sermon probably was impelled to use such striking and astounding assertions as filled his lecture.

Let us have more fair play, more charity, more conscientious effort to learn what is the real truth.

A little more Christianity in the church, a little more Christian feeling, as Jesus taught, in the pulpit, would do more for good than trades upon upon misconception of the subject.

With no effort to criticize or throw mud, I would only like to see from the mental thrones of this country a little more CONSCIENCE.

Salem Votes Bonds.
 By a vote of 69 to 10, the taxpayers of this city, Monday voted to authorize the city council to negotiate a short time four per cent home bond issue of about $80,000, representing the 8 per cent warrant indebtedness of the city with accrued interest. The vote was canvassed by Mayor C. P. Bishop and City Recorder N. J. Judah and found to be as given above, the detailed vote being as follows:—First ward—For bonds 9, against bonds 3; second ward—For 36, against 5; third ward—For 9, against 0; fourth ward—For 15, against 5. The judges and clerks voting were: First ward—J. M. Parmenter, A. N. Yeaton and C. C. Reed; second ward—M. E. Goodell; J. A. Baker and A. J. Bassy; third ward—Wm. Manning, G. Steiner, O. H. Fay, P. L. Larson and A. F. McAtes.

GETTING BIGGER.

The Fourth of July Celebration is Growing.

A Busy Meeting of the Committees for the Occasion Was Held Last Night.

Last evening all the sub-committees on the Fourth of July celebration met at city recorder's court room for a final round-up of the work being done. Chairman Judah presided and pushed the work.

Chairman Stolz on floats reported good progress, and says their chariots will be ready for decoration soon.

Messrs. W. W. Zinn, A. F. McAtes and Geo. Sly are pushing the matter of street sports, and will in due season announce some hot numbers.

Electric lights were ordered in Marion square, and the decoration committee will have several hundred Japanese lanterns strung through that resort for the evening program, which will be elaborate and entertaining.

Dr. E. A. Pierce was designated as chief marshal in place of F. W. Steustler, who cannot serve. Rev. W. C. Kantner will act as chaplain.

Carpenters are today at work preparing Marion square with seats, stand, etc. Chairman Judah was instructed to appoint a special committee to decorate the stand.

Mr. Krause, of the fireworks committee, reported that $900 worth of fireworks would be on hand, and it was decided to have them fired at dark from Wilson avenue.

Mr. Wiggins, of the bicycle committee, reports among other things a ten mile road race, to be started from State and Commercial streets, to be run via Turner road, reform school, asylum farm and other points to make the required distance. This will be a lively event, and not less than 200 wheelmen will be in line in the parade. All riders are invited to join this list by giving their names to the committee.

The McMinnville baseball team accept a quality that the masses are turning to something they think better? Judging from the arguments brought to bear one would certainly be entitled to have such a fear.

The divine said he is not a Christian Scientist because he is a Christian. Does the reverend gentleman call that address a Christianly effort? Does he consider it a fair sample?
