Early Friday morning four carriages containing a merry company of ladies, gentleman and children, drove up State street starting for the old Dr. Savage home in the Waldo Hills, where a re-union had been planned, and considering a large family of children, and the years of separation and changes, that naturally follow our paths, a surprisingly large follow our paths, a surprisingly large number had gathered to do honor to the recasion

After a beautiful drive thirteen miles past fields of waving grain of all kinds and colors, we reached the old home. As we drove up the lane we stopped in front of the huge cedar trees on either side of the walk leading to the home, each branch containing sweet memorie of childhood days. All about spoke words of welcome, and we soon realized that others had preceeded us, for the merry laughter of voices within greeted dr cars.

After the usual form of congratula-ions and hearty hand shakes, the one always important feature was discussed namely, the dinner. It was plain to be seen, our plans must be changed. A pic-nic dinner in the grove would be impracticable, owing to the unsettled condition of the weather. This caused a slight disappointment, particularly among the the junior members of the party. How-ever, their weeping was turned to joy when "Come to Dinner," was an-nounced. It consisted of every thing good to eat, spread upon spotless white linen and cut flowers, and ocean spray. The sweet music for the occasion, was furnished by two caged singers, which seemed to realize their responsibility in ntertaining the company.

After dinner those who were able ad-After dinner those who were able ad-journed to other parts of the house. The younger members of the party in-dulged in music, vocal and instrumental, while the older ones were conversing upon the past and present, the possibil-ities and probabilities of the future. Despite the pleasures of the day a feeling of loneliness stole over all as we thought of former gatherings at the dear old home where father and mothers yoice were first heard to welcome and last to say, good bye, but which have
