Shipments of Arms Reach the Rebels From Japan and Australia, and Cartridges of United States Make.

The Chicago Tribune's special correspondence from Manila under date of June 26, says: The next campaign can hardly begin sooner than November, although the country may dry up enough towards the middle of October to permit the American troops to take the field then. The American army during the rainy season can hardly be expected to do anything more than hold what it has gained and prepare for the next campaign. The ground to defend is not very great.

On the south of Manila we have many about 15 miles away, where the Fourth and Fifteenth infantry, with several guns from the Sixth artillery, are stationed. This territory was gained only within the last two weeks by the hard fighting at Paranaque, at which even the rattle of the rifles can be heard in Manila. We hold the road that runs to Imus through Paranaque and Bacoor, every inch of which was gained only by hard fighting.

Northward the farthest point in the control of our soldiers is San Fernando, 41 miles from Manila, on the railroad. The railroad is 149 miles in length in all, but the insurgent control all the line between San Fernando and Dagupan, the northern terminal of the road. The Americans hold Candaba, east of San Fernando 10 miles. They hold all the towns along the railroad, of course, to San Fernando and Baling, seven miles east of Tullin.

Reports continually come from Baling that the town is entirely surrounded by the enemy and will be carried by assault. But Colonel Page and the Third infantry have so far driven the rebels back that disastrous loss every time they have assaulted the town, and he declares that he can hold it for an indefinite time, although his position there is by no means an easy one. Supplies and mail can only be carried over to Baling from the railroad under an escort of not less than 150 men, who are invariably attacked somewhere along the road, both going and coming.

At San Francisco two determined attacks along the whole rebel line were made last week. The second engagements lasted three hours, when the insurgents were driven back with heavy losses. Bullets fly continually over both sides and stray bullets frequently find victims. Heavy shipments of arms are said to be constantly arriving from Japan and Australia, and it is said, even from our own country. Cartridges picked up in the insurgent trenches bear the mark of a big manufacturing firm in the United States. The insurgents have three factories where they manufacture cartridges and other munitions of war. If they were kept on the run, they would have no time to equip themselves that they could return after defeat, better able to fight than they were before.

They are learning things in every encounter with the Americans. The papers in Manila have continually referred to the fact that the rebels were prone to shoot to high, and they seemed finally to have learned the lesson and now they are getting their shots well down and doing a great improvement in marksmanship.

The few Americans who came over to Manila a week ago Tuesday on the Esmeralda, from Hong Kong, were astonished a few hours after sunrise, when their ship had steamed out to quarantine to hear heavy cannonading from the monitor Monadnock, which was in plain sight down the coast about five miles below Manila. Some of the passengers thought it was some sort of a salute in honor of the arrival of some distinguished naval or army hero and they eagerly questioned a soldier, who sat on the stern of the health officer's launch.

"That," said the young man, "that's nothing. That's just a battle." It was some time before the passengers could believe that the Americans and insurgents were fighting within the sight and sound of Manila, where the war had started some six months before. The battle raged all day and at 4 o'clock in the afternoon the rattle of small arms could be distinctly heard, and late in the evening the health officer told us the fighting had been at Paranaque.
