BRITISH PARLIAMENT.

Extended Statement by Chamberlain in House of Commons.
LONDON, Oct. 27.—The house of commons, by a vote of 224 to 28, passed the second reading of the appropriation bill Harcourt, the liberal leader, said he desired again to call attention to the position of the secretary of state for the colonies. Mr. Chamberlain, during the negotiations and in his speech at Highbury.

Mr. Chamberlain replied repudiating the intention of being provocative, and saying he only intended to be plain and free from ambiguity. He added that he only followed in the negotiations the principles observed by all statesmen during the past 10 or 20 years. There was a time he explained, when diplomacy was regarded as given to statesmen to enable them to conceal their thoughts. That might fairly be called the "old diplomacy" which he said "I absolutely repudiate."

"People," he continued, "are entitled to demand a clear expression of views," and he asserted there was never to the satisfaction of the secretary of state that President Kruger had been in doubt. Mr. Chamberlain then said: "Our object, methods and determination were to carry out the objects of the Transvaal treaty. It was not desirable to include an official despatch collated suggestions and indications of opinion but semi-official warning was frequently conveyed in a speech. A similar warning was given by Lord Salisbury to the sultan at the Guildhall banquet, and I am still absolutely unrepentant."

Regarding Mr. Davitt, Mr. Chamberlain said he recognized that he had hitherto treated the disease of Transvaal and sincerely, "and," he added, "I would pay the greatest attention to his arguments if I did not know he would use precisely the same arguments in regard to any British war which are based on his enmity to England."

Mr. Chamberlain then said: "That would have been the Irish argument in the Spanish-American war, in which Spain showed herself infinitely less capable of defending herself than the Transvaal."

Redmond shouted: "Transvaal did not blow up your warships." Mr. Chamberlain continued: "The great, almost determining, contest between the United States and Spain was fought without the loss of a single American. We have never denied that the Transvaal was a foe man worthy of our steel."

Not only was the disparity between the forces in the Spanish-American war as great as those now engaged, but the Transvaal was the weaker in the end and their right of interference arose from the fact that at the same distance from their territories there was oppression, not of American citizens, but of another race. Mr. Chamberlain then said: "The intervention of the United States in the mind of the civilized world, or, at any rate, in the eyes of Englishmen and Irishmen."

Mr. Chamberlain then replied to the criticism of his not accepting the mediation of Mr. Hofmeyer, the Afrikaner leader, pointing out that while he believed in peace, and justice, he could not forget that when President Kruger made "absolutely illusory proposals for settlement." Mr. Hofmeyer was perfectly ready to accept them. President Kruger refused Mr. Hofmeyer in promising him proposals, which differed materially from those he really presented.

There has been on the part of the Transvaal a grossness altogether incomprehensible, if they desired a settlement," continued Mr. Chamberlain. "I believe that from first to last President Kruger never intended to give anything approaching equal rights to the white races, or any acknowledgment of British supremacy."

War, therefore, was inevitable. There has been an enormous strain upon us. We are called upon to bring the war to a quick conclusion and send across the sea a force such as no nation in history ever before sent. This is entirely due to the preparations which made the Transvaal an armed camp and which not only secured it a defensive position, but enabled it to take the offensive against the large force now engaged."

"Such a thing could not be continued forever. We have needed a permanent force of 20,000 in South Africa. Our foreign friends are convinced of it. Yet they are not happy."

Such predictions were made before and were even current in the days of Elizabeth. But I am not alarmed. One great Teutonic people cannot hold in subjection another great Teutonic people but this has never been our course. It is impossible to pretend that the Dutch at the Cape are civilized by our rule, when they have all the rights Englishmen possess and even in individual cases are permitted to talk and write treason.

Whatever may be the result of the war and the premature talk of the result from the present war, does any one imagine that we shall fail to do for others what we claimed for ourselves, or refuse equal rights to the Dutch in the Transvaal which they refused us?"
