SUBURBAN ELECTRIC ROADS.

The dispatches tell us that the Kansas City and Leavenworth Electric Railroad Company opened its road for general traffic on Tuesday. The distance is 21 miles, and was covered on the trial trip in one hour.

The building of this line is thought to be only the beginning of a great inter-urban railway system centering in the city at the mouth of the Kaw. Should the new line prove a good investment it is more than probable that all of the towns and cities within a radius of 60 miles of Kansas City will be connected with one big electric rapid transit system. Right of way franchises have already been secured for a similar line between Topeka and that city.

This is only one instance of the way in which the traffic and transportation problem is being solved in the vicinity of the progressive larger cities of the country.

The electric road, cheap to build and operate, is taking the place, not only of the costly and unwieldy steam railroad, but, to an increasing extent, of the vehicle drawn by horses.

The electric roads are reaching out into the country, bringing rapid transit to the farmer's door, and connecting the country towns with the larger cities.

They not only give the denizen of the city a chance to reside farther out, but they act as feeders for the city and its stores and business houses.

If some of the paper roads, which are seasonally built from Salem to the surrounding towns, could be made to materialize it would be a great thing for this city, and would cause a healthy and permanent growth.

Then improve our schools so that there would be some inducement for families to settle here, and the town would surprise some of the conservatives.

The "Burghers" in Salem are bombarding the "Outlander," but they haven't met on the Tug-of-war River yet.

This evening in Faneuil Hall, Boston, will take place an immense mass meeting to express sympathy with the burghers of the Transvaal and Orange Free State. Why are no pro-English meetings being held?

The expenses of the Philippine war to date would have built Nicaragua Canal. It would have given as many days' employment to workmen as the war has soldiers, and some people have the presumption to believe the country would be better off for it.

It seems to be the fashion now for every little cross roads newspaper to boast about its big circulation and how the people are breaking their necks to subscribe by the hundreds. The Journal gets one occasionally, but it requires diligent application to do a legitimate business.

Great Britain should not despair. With an immense army John Bull has not been able to whip a small army of Boers inside of sixty days, there is the example of Otis. With an army of 65,000 men he has been unable to subdue a "small handful of Tagals" in eleven months.—Exchange.

It is suggested that men like Senator Clark and Representative Roberts should be tried at home and at the expense of their respective state or district. That would be all right, and probably prevent the election of such men, but it wouldn't give the opportunity for political capital for the party in power.

The advance of 70,000 Russian troops on the Afghan frontier is not very startling to the British. The Russians deny that it was an advance on British India territory but was merely made to test the capacity of the trans-Caspian railroad and the "denial" added "that the experiment proved highly successful."

"A prosperity panic" is the ingenious explanation of the late collapse in Wall street which is made by the financial editor of the New York Times. Here is a suggestion of great possibilities. "Prosperity panic," which, being interpreted, means a good times hard time, or a profitable loss, might be supplemented with healthy sickness, exhilarating depression, joyful griefs, religious chasteness, and so on.—The Public.

Surprise Tin Wedding.

About 60 of the relatives and friends of Mr. and Mrs. G. D. Bowen met at their home near Silverton to celebrate the tenth anniversary of their wedding, bringing with them many useful articles of tinware and well-filled baskets for the luncheon, and when the noon hour arrived all were invited to the spacious dining room, where a beautiful feast was spread such as one seldom has the chance to partake of. All did ample justice to the same, and when evening came the guests departed to their homes wishing their host and hostess many happy returns of the day. The occasion was one long to be remembered by all who were present.

DEL PILAR'S LAST FIGHT

Remarkable Exploit of Major March's Battalion.

After the Rebel Chief Over Supposed Impassable Trails and Mountains.

The Associated Press correspondent with March's battalion, pursuing Aguinaldo through the mountains which Spanish soldiers and writers have said were impassable to white men, sends from Bontoe the following account of the fight of December 2, wherein General Gregorio Pilar was killed:

"The entire march of March's battalion of the Thirty-third infantry from Candón to Cervantes has been a remarkable exploit. With four detached companies of Cunningham's handful of scouts, the command left Young's headquarters at Candón on the afternoon of November 30, March having received information on his journey up the coast which led to the belief that Aguinaldo had left the coast road at Candón for the mountains instead of going further north, as had been supposed. This information was confirmed by General Young, who remained at Candón with one troop of the Third cavalry, sent two other troops to occupy Santiago and then ordered March's battalion into the mountains after Aguinaldo. The men had only 140 rounds of ammunition, no rations and had to live on the country.

The four companies were commanded by Captains Jenkinson and Davies and Lieutenants Tompkins and White. After two hard days' climbing, the command reached a point two miles beyond the village of Lingal, where the fight occurred. There was a snake-like trail leading up the precipitous mountain side, and half way up the insurgents had constructed trenches, from which they could pour a deadly fire down on the troops advancing along the lower reaches of the trail or in the valley below. Cunningham's scouts, with Davies' company, were in the advance, and were fired upon first. Jenkinson's company went to their support, and after the exchange of a few shots, these troops waited in the shelter of a hill.

"The enemy continued their fire, and Jenkinson ordered a charge around a bend in the trail. Captain Cunningham and Lieutenant McClelland led the charge, and as the men rushed around the bend they came into full view of the insurgents 200 yards above, who opened a well directed fire from the trenches and from behind the rocks and trees. Half a dozen of Jenkinson's men fell killed or wounded within a few feet of each other, some hit in several places. Their comrades dragged them behind shelter, and March with the remainder of the battalion coming up, the troops sought what shelter they could, while March sent 12 sharpshooters to the top of a knoll on the opposite side of the valley, overlooking the trenches. These men made the ascent of the knoll under heavy fire, but when they reached the top their well-directed shots soon had the effect of making the insurgents careful not to expose themselves.

"March then directed Tompkins to execute a flank movement with his company by climbing the side of a hill a thousand feet high on the insurgents' left. Tompkins, with Lieutenant True and 50 men, made the ascent of the hill by dragging themselves up with the aid of bushes and bunches of grass, and reaching the rocks above found several insurgents there, who fired on them, but were soon put to flight. Tompkins then took a position overlooking the entire rebel force, and took them completely by surprise, as they evidently never supposed that the Americans could climb an almost vertical hill and flank them out of their position. The company on the hill and sharpshooters on knoll poured in a murderous fire and at the same time March with three companies below charged up the hill shooting and yelling. The insurgents broke from behind the rocks and trenches and every other position and fled up the trail and into the thick underbrush and the fight was over.

If ever superstition could find excuse, it would be when the expectant mother, calendar in hand, ponders the fortunes of the coming day and hopes that the baby's birthday may fall on a lucky time. It is natural to wish the best of fortune for those we love. Why not will fortune as well as wish it for the child?

The greatest fortune any mother can bestow on her child is a healthy body and a happy mind, and with this great fortune every mother may endow the child if she will. The child's stock of health is what the mother supplies. The weak and worried woman has a very slender stock of health to bestow on the baby.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription makes mothers healthy and happy. It does away with the misery of morning sickness. It strengthens the nerves, gives the body a feeling of buoyancy, makes the mind cheerful, gives vigor and elasticity to the organs peculiarly feminine, and baby's advent to the world is free from danger and painless.

"My first two babies were still-born, and I suffered every thing but death," writes Mrs. Euphemia Falconer, of Trent, Michigan Co., Mich. "I was reduced to bed by a third child. I was taken with hemorrhage or flooding and came near having a miscarriage from female weakness. For two months I was under the care of our doctor, but was getting weaker all the time until I sent and got three bottles of Favorite Prescription. I improved fast and continued to use your medicine until baby was born, and he is healthy and all right. My health has been good ever since. I now weigh 150 pounds."

There is no alcohol, whisky or other intoxicant in Favorite Prescription, neither does it contain any opium or other narcotic.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets do not react on the system. They are a perfect medicine.

Which Way?

Are the children growing nicely? A little stronger each month? A trifle heavier? That's good.

Or is one of them growing the other way? Growing weaker, growing thinner, growing paler?

If so, you should try Scott's Emulsion at once.

It's both a food and a medicine. It makes them grow in the right way—fatter, stronger, healthier.

Scott's Emulsion is a food and a medicine. It makes them grow in the right way—fatter, stronger, healthier.

"Their force was not large, probably not over 200, but only 25 passed in retreat over the trail through Aguinaldo to Cervantes. The remainder were killed or wounded or escaped into the brush. Pilar's body was found in the road, where his men had been compelled to abandon it. The bodies of six others including a lieutenant, were found, but this was only a small proportion of their loss, for 35 number were seen to fall from the 10:30 and mountain side into an inaccessible abyss below, and bloody trails led in every direction, showing where the dead and wounded had been carried into the brush. The American loss was two killed and nine wounded.

"Part of the battle was fought in the clouds, as a heavy mist settled over the mountains, concealing the trail. The two American dead were buried where they fell, and the remainder of the column moved on in search of the hiding place of the Filipino refugee president."
