

At Bull Run.

Comrade Chas. Elms, of Mechanicsville, N. Y., was struck by a piece of shell which later caused severe heart trouble. He says: "At Bull Run I had a piece of shell lodged in my shoulder, and later rheumatism set in, which in turn affected my heart to such extent that several doctors pronounced my case incurable. Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure relieved my pains, shortness of breath and enabled me to work as usual, and prolonged my life."

MY MOTHER. BY MILTON L. MURDOCK. She gave the best years of her life With joy for me, And robbed herself, with loving heart, Unstintingly.

For me with willing hands she toiled From day to day, For me she prayed when headstrong youth Would have its way.

Her gentle arms, my cradle once, Are weary now; And Time has set the seal of care Upon her brow.

And, though no other eyes than mine Their meaning trace, I read my history in the lines Of her dear face.

And, 'mid His gems, who showers gifts As shining sands, I count her days as pearls that fall From His kind hands.

The Christian Advocate. The Club Meeting. At the last session of the Home Topics club, in the informal talk before the regular program was digested, the late cooking school was nibbled at in a gossip way.

The question was, what had that innovation into the social quietness of the town done for its fair inhabitants? Some thought it had done wonders, while others were not so sanguine as to its benefactions.

One woman feared it had swelled their family grocery bills to such an extent that the whole tribe would be compelled to begin fasting a week before Lent. The Madam Malaprop of the company suggested that "if it had such a deharmonizing effect the whole year's accounts?"

This aroused the suspicion that if the subject were allowed to drift the rules of the society might be strained beyond the point of good form, and the president suddenly called the meeting to order.

The subject for the afternoon's discussion was "concerning the 'Educational Duties of the Home.'" The presiding genius, known as a chairman at meetings of men, is a genial, broad-minded woman, whose good sense serves as a pneumatic brake and safety valve for the deliberations of the skirted evangelists of every-day knowledge.

After the topic in hand had been fully launched, Mrs. Up-to-Date presented the phase of the parents taking part in the daily studies of the children, and suggested the necessity of keeping in touch with their every-day school work.

Times have changed and methods are not what they were in our girlhood days, so we can't trust to luck and the school man to do it all for our children. I believe that we should learn every lesson with the children, and thus review our own educations and always be up to or slightly in advance of our children.

Thus we can be their guide and example all through life, and give them an intellectual staff that will feed their minds and inspire them in their every undertaking.

Here Mrs. Short-Stop suggested the dilemma of a family of a dozen children with a dozen studies each, and as many minds of their own.

Mrs. Home-Spun then ventured the modest suggestion that the children didn't need to have ideas pounded into them half so much as they needed a little encouragement in drawing out their own native talent and ability.

She thought it was well enough to help a youngster over a hard place here and there, and she even admitted that it wouldn't hurt the parents to brush up against a little real book learning once in a while.

Mrs. Brilliant insisted that the essence of the whole educational business was to make children presentable to the world, and to give them the polish that was necessary to distinguish them from the common people and the vulgar classes.

She believed that every child was born to distinguish itself in some branch of education. Some young people are cut out for orators, others for singers, and none but can shine in some respect, encourage them to do their best all the time, and you are sure that they will grow up to respect their own importance in this world.

By then the latest text books on all subjects, help the teacher all you can to push them in their studies, and by all means compel them to realize their social responsibilities. Mrs. Brilliant, indulged in a flight of rhetorical effusions concerning the great importance of education, and closed with the suggestion that it should be given to the rising generation in every form possible.

Mrs. Thoroughgood spoke up in a mellow voice, in musical contrast with the previous speaker. She had long ago given up keeping pace with all the educational fads, and thought our children should be inspired with a higher motive than being at the head of the class. They cannot all be first, except in our hearts, and we must see to it that they all fare alike in our affections.

She had long ago given up the idea of keeping up with the bookishness of modern times, and preferred the homely distinction of maintaining the confidence of her children above all things else. There is a closer affinity than books can possibly bring, and a richer reward than to be able to tell the young folks "I told you so." Let us be companions to our children and share their tribulations, their fun and their joys alike. Carefully direct their hands and minds as far as they are open to receive help, but try if possible to prevent their entering the hallucination that they are smarter than their parents. Open the home to their friends and chums. Fill their stomachs as well as their minds with the substantial of life. Help them plan their play as well as their work. Read good works in company with them, and in the discussions that follow give them the benefit of your best practical thoughts. Dear mothers, do not denounce everything that you do not approve of, don't antagonize your children, but be firm, just and loving, and they will never get beyond the influence of the mother love, which is after all, the greatest blessing that young people can have.

Be Not Fearful. Whatever our troubles, whether of mind, body, or estate, let us not be fearful. There are moods in which, whatever our circumstances, we are as safe as the angels in heaven. When we love, honor, and adore our heavenly Father, we are of their spiritual company—the company over whom disaster, accident, charge, have no impairing power. Let us not shudder, then, as though these external things which vex us could have influence permanently to disturb our peace. Fear of them can alone give them power over us, at all. Matter and hate can never usurp the lordship of spirit and love. Let us be patient, then, resting quietly in the everlasting arms, assured that the gentle and trustful, in virtue of the very nature with which they are endowed, must triumph over adverse circumstances and unlovely besetments.—The Examiner (Baptist).

Chicken With Spaghetti. Singe, clean and truss a nice, fat chicken. Lay it on a trivet, or a perforated tin in a stew pan and add boiling water to half cover, and one level tablespoon of salt. Let it cook very slowly, till tender, from one hour to one and a half, according to the age of the chicken. When tender pour off one pint of the water, and set aside to cool. Cover the chicken and let it stand where it will keep warm but not cook longer. Into another stewpan put one tablespoon of butter and cook in it, without browning, one small onion sliced, then pour in the pint of chicken liquor freed from oil, and when boiling add one cup of macaroni broken in inch pieces, or about a dozen long sticks of spaghetti, coating them in as the boiling broth softens them. Let it boil until the broth is nearly absorbed, then add one cup of milk or thin cream and cook slowly until the spaghetti is tender and has absorbed the liquor. Sprinkle half a cup of grated cheese over it and cook a few minutes longer. When this is nearly done draw the chicken forward and let it become boiling hot again. Remove the chicken to a platter and cut it in convenient pieces for serving. Let the liquor boil down to one pint, skim off the fat, and then stir the liquor gradually into two tablespoons of flour, which have been cooked in two tablespoons of hot butter. Add celery salt and paprika. Turn the spaghetti out over the chicken and pour the sauce over the whole. Garnish with parsley. MARY J. LINCOLN.

Prune Whip. A most dainty and delicious dessert for this time of the year is a prune whip. Soak a quart of prunes over night, cook slowly in a little water until soft; put through a potato ricer, sweeten and beat in a well beaten white of an egg, flavor with a little vanilla and serve with whipped cream after it has been thoroughly chilled.

Indian Pudding. For dinner, a most delicious pudding may be made from cornmeal: One quart milk, boiled in a farina kettle. When boiling, add four tablespoons of fine cornmeal mixed with four tablespoons of wheat flour. Stir thoroughly. When done, set off the stove and let cool; then add the yolks of four well-beaten eggs, one tablespoon of butter and a teaspoonful of salt. Make a meringue of the whites. Bake the pudding in a delicate brown, spread over it the meringue, placing the whole in the oven a moment to brown.

Pretty Table Decoration. Two pretty ideas in table decoration come to us fresh from abroad, and are well worth copying. One is a delightfully novel decoration, formed by ribbon twisted in and out, forming a link between tiny nosegays laid simply on the cloth. When flowers are plentiful, why not carry out the same idea with chains of flowers?

Mistress: "Why were you dismissed from your last place?" Up-to-Date Servant Girl: "Well, I like your inquiries! Did I ask you why your last girl left you?"

The artistic standards of beauty require that the waist of a woman should be twice the size of the throat. Therefore, if one's throat measures 12 1/2 inches, one's waist ought to measure 25. The Venus de Medici, supposed to be a perfect type of feminine beauty, is only five feet two inches high. She has a waist of 27 inches. The waip waist is not only unpleasant to look at, but it is accountable for many of the ailments of

From Willamette Collegian. The following is a part of a letter recently received by a friend in this city from Prof. L. G. Cochran, who occupied the chair of Science in this school last year: "I left on January 1st for Colorado and returned January 18th. Mrs. Cochran fell and broke her thigh bone. We thought she would die, but she has begun to get better. Monday afternoon Harold fell from the fourth floor balcony clear to the sidewalk below—forty feet. He had hold of a pulley rope which sliding through the wheel, somewhat checked his descent, otherwise he would have been killed. As it is he is quite sick and has had an attack of congestion of the lungs, but is recovering. Everybody thinks it is a wonderful escape. Remember us to all friends who may inquire."

A LIFE SAVED. Dr. J. F. Cook, the Botanical Specialist, Succeeds Where Other Fail.

To whom it may concern: This is to certify that Bertha P. Conner, of Mt. Angel precinct, Marion county, Oregon, has suffered from a cancerous growth in the left ear for about three years. The growth was cut out twice and burned out once by Albany Physicians, but the growth came back as bad as ever, and pained her so badly that she had to be taken from school. After three weeks' treatment by Dr. J. F. Cook, of Salem, Oregon, the Botanical Specialist, the growth entirely disappeared, and at this date, four months since treatment was begun, the growth has not reappeared, and the ear has entirely healed, leaving only the scars indicated by the Albany doctors.

I hereby certify that the above statement is absolutely true, and that Bertha P. Conner, the person mentioned in the above, has resided in my family since her early childhood, bearing the relationship to me of niece. H. C. LONO.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this eighth day of June, 1899. W. W. Hall, county clerk of Marion county, Oregon. All diseases successfully treated and red.
