Successful business men agree that the chances of the boy of today are smaller than the chances of the boy of twenty or forty years ago. Today there are more boys, there is a better standard of public school education, and it becomes more difficult every year for a man withat large capital to engage in business.

Twenty and even ten years ago, many boys came to New York for the purpose of going to sea. Today sailing vessels are few, for the steamships have crowded them out of the great ocean carrying trade.
