HORRID BUTCHERY RECALLED

Kid West Who Helped Hang O'Brien.

The Yukon Murderer, Driven Out of Portland.

PORTLAND, Jan. 16.—George A. Avery, who, along with H. F. Cantwell, was arrested Monday, charged with being a suspicious person with no visible means of support, was recognized yesterday as the notorious "Kid" West, who was taken from Walla Walla penitentiary to Dawson, Yukon Territory, to give evidence as a witness in the murder trial in which one O'Brien was charged with having killed Linn Relfe, of Seattle; Clayton, a Skagway merchant, and Olson, a telegraph lineman, December 25, 1899, halfway between Dawson and Skagway. After giving his evidence at Dawson as to what he knew of O'Brien's record, Avery was taken back to Walla Walla penitentiary to serve the remainder of his sentence.

The murder of the three men was a singularly cold blooded crime, ruthless in its details. The manner in which the noose was fastened around O'Brien's neck for his part in the outrage spoke well for the rigor and stern severity with which the Canadian Government acted in running him to earth. One of the victims of the murder, Clayton, had extensive business interests at Dawson, and in making preparations for a journey to Skagway he happened to mention in the hearing of O'Brien and other desperadoes that he expected to take a considerable sum of money with him.

Linn Relfe, who was a member of a well-known Seattle family, and was employed as a gold miner, had started from the interior, homeward bound, December 15, 1899, and he and Clayton fell in with each other at Minto station about half way between Skagway and Dawson on the evening before Christmas, 1899. Here they met the telegraph lineman, and next day, December 25, 1899, the three men started on the journey for Skagway, little dreaming that a violent death would meet each of them on the way. As the three left the little station that was the last seen of them alive, except by their murderers. The three friends had proceeded a few miles when they heard a command to "halt" from a bank above them. Resistance was useless, as the travelers' rifles were strapped to their backs. They were ordered to leave the trail, and in the outrage that followed they were robbed and shot to pieces, and their bodies thrown under the river ice through a hole.

Several days elapsed before the telegraph lineman was missed, and he had failed to report for duty at the next station, and then the hue and cry began. O'Brien was arrested, and many thousands of dollars were spent by the Canadian Government in the prosecution of the murderer. The Northwest mounted police surpassing all their previous achievements. Avery had been with O'Brien's gang before the murder took place, and he was forced to tell about O'Brien's actions and conversation about the time of the murder. O'Brien was found guilty and was hanged. The second murderer was never caught.

Avery told the police that he had picked up Cantwell in Seattle. Cantwell's chief objection to being arrested lay in his grievance that his term in jail interfered with his smoking cigarettes. Both prisoners admitted that when they first arrived in this city they had loaded revolvers in their possession. These revolvers were afterward found where the prisoners had left them, in a wood pile at Second and Couch streets. Both Avery and Cantwell admitted that they came to Portland in the hope of robbing a few saloons, or engaging in highway robbery. They had no money when arrested.

Yesterday Municipal Judge Cameron said to the prisoners: "There is a charge of vagrancy against each of you. Now, we do not wish people like you in this city, and the court would like to know if you would leave Portland right away, if set at liberty?" "Would I leave Portland?" exclaimed Avery, joyfully. "You just give me a chance. I'll go at once."

"You must leave the city before dark sets in. We can't have people like you at large; you might do some mischief," hinted the Judge. "Now here is what the court is prepared to do: You will be each sentenced to 60 days' imprisonment, and sentence will be suspended on the understanding that you leave town at once. If you linger here after 6 o'clock you will be brought back to serve your sentence."

"What about our revolvers? They were not exactly in our possession; but they belong to a friend, and we will have to return them to him," remarked Avery, with an impudent leer. "You had better not think about your revolvers; they are confiscated. You ought to thank your stars that you escaped so easily," rejoined the Judge.

Several persons in the courtroom said they fully expected to see Avery and Cantwell doing duty at the rock pile. The previous pair were conducted out of the city limits by the police, and were given this command: "Don't come back."

STATE PRISON STATISTICS

Increase of Ten Convicts in Last Quarter of Oregon Institution.

The financial report of the penitentiary for the three months ending December 31, 1901, shows that the daily average number of convicts confined in that institution is 207.24. At the close of last quarter the enrollment was 202, and now it is 302, an increase of 10 during the quarter. The number received during the quarter was 53, and the number discharged 43. One convict turned from the asylum as cured, and one committed suicide. The total salary account for the quarter was $4718.22, and the maintenance and improvement account $3208.74, making a total of $9926.96.

Annual Prison Statistics.

This quarterly report completes the year's accounts, and with the reports hitherto filed, furnishes material from which annual statistics may be computed. On Jan. 1, 1901, there were in the prison 278 convicts, and at the close of the year there were 302, making a net gain of 24. The expenditures for the year by quarters, not including the cost of repairs and improvements, are as follows:

Quarter	Salaries	Supplies
First quarter	$4,400.00	$6,441.31
Second quarter	4,400.00	4,507.20
Third quarter	4,605.00	7,679.46
Fourth quarter	4,718.22	4,821.81

Total for year $18,323.85 $22,449.81
The total for both salaries and supplies is $41,773.66. Many of the items for repairs are properly chargeable against the maintenance account, but as the report does not separate these from the improvement expenses, the total cost of maintenance cannot be more correctly stated than in the foregoing figures.

The average daily enrollment has been 207.27, and from this it may be seen that the cost of maintenance, for the salaries of employees and supplies, is $142.19 per capita per year, or $1.85 per capita per month. A good sized farm is connected with the penitentiary, and most of the vegetables consumed are raised by means of convict labor.

GOOD MARGINS IN HOPS

Prices on This Year Contracts are Higher.

A considerable advance is noted in the hop market in the last month. New York dealers, who were selling at 13 cents in December, quote 16 cents at present. Local firms are selling at from 12 to 13 cents, and there are prospects of the 1901 crop yet selling at 20 cents in New York.

The London market is not so good as two months ago and prices are lower than in this country. It is estimated that not over 30,000 bales of hops yet remain in the Oregon growers' hands; about 6000 bales in Washington and a small amount in California. In Yakima, Wash., all but three growers have sold their crops. The crop was smaller than usual last year, and on this account larger crops will be raised hereafter. The entire crop of the United States for 1901 was 230,000 bales, and 60,000 bales of this was shipped to foreign markets. The consumption here is at least 300,000 bales and it leaves a shortage of 140,000 bales.

This will cause prices to advance considerably, and accounts for the raise of the last month.

In Marion county dealers have contracted for about one-third of the 1902 crop already.

Neils and Faber, as agents for a New York firm have made several contracts at 10 cents. O. E. Kays of Salem has contracted his crop for three years, to amounting to 30,000 lbs. per year, to Paul R. G. Hest and Lechman Co. at ten cents. T. A. Lively and Co. have made several contracts with growers, among them one with Fred Kaser of Salem for 20,000 lbs. at 10 cents.

DALRYMPLES

Mr. Elmer King

Who lives near Lewisburg, 14 miles east of Salem in the red hills, concluded some time ago that he had followed a walking plow about as long as he cared to, and desiring to find a sulky plow that would scour in the famous "red hills" land, was confronted with the old argument that "nothing but a chilled plow would work in the hills." Mr. King, however, is not so wedded to old theories that he is afraid to at least give any good implement a fair trial.

Saturday he took out one of our "High Lift" sulky plows, fitted with a 16-inch steel bottom. This is likely the only steel plow that is in use within cannon shot of the place and of course we are naturally interested in seeing it succeed. How well it succeeded is best attested by the fact that Mr. King was so well pleased that he decided at once upon keeping it, this after he had made tests and comparisons with the chilled plow in the same field at the same time.

Mr. King is satisfied, and is only doing what the progressive farmers all over the valley are doing, buying sulky and gang plows and thus placing themselves in a measure independent of the weather.

This particular plow is known as the "High Lift," as the plow beam rises straight up, and in action the lift lever runs loose, so that in case the plow strikes an obstruction, it raises of its own accord, and settles back into the furrow the same way. It can be used with or without poles. The furrow wheels are known as "caster wheels," thus enabling the operator to make a square turn to right or left.

We have had a wonderfully good trade this winter on all classes of sulky and gang plows, both mold-board and disc plows. We carry the Benito rotary disc and the Moline and Syracuse milners, and can please anyone—no matter what the nature of the soil.

When Frobenius was German.
The name of France is derived from the French or Franks, a people of Germany who seized that part of the country nearest the Rhine and settled there. Later on they subdued Paris and made that the royal seat of their increasing empire.

The origin of other geographical names is interesting and will serve to enlighten us when we read of, for instance, Hibernia for Ireland. Hibernia is said to be derived from a Pictish word meaning "farthest habitation," there being no country known to them west of Erin.

Portugal obtained its name from Por, the haven or port where the Gauls landed their stores. This is Oporto, called by the Portuguese O Porto (the port). The town was given as a dowry to Teresa when she married Henry de Lorraine, who styled himself Earl of Portugal because the place was known as the portus Gallorum (the port of the Gauls). The name was finally extended to the whole country.

Russia took its denomination from the Russi, or Russi, a people of the south of Russia, who possessed themselves of the country in the declining days of the Greek empire. Being the predominant inhabitants, they imposed their name on all the rest.

A Street Parable.
A little girl stood at a window blowing soap bubbles. Beneath stood a little boy, and as she blew bubbles toward him he tried to catch them. They broke and disappeared on all sides, but the boy laughed and kept up the game, she smiling down and he gazing upward eagerly.

"Behold, a parable," said a man to a woman. "The eternal relation of the sexes! You blow beautiful bubbles down to us from your height, and we weary ourselves in trying vainly to catch them. Poor little boy!"

The pair played and laughed in the sunshine until the boy grew tired. He called out "Goodbye!" gayly and ran away to play with other boys and girls in the street. The girl looked after him wistfully, a shadow on her face. She did not care to blow bubbles any more. She leaned out to watch him, and as he did so she tipped over the bowl of soapy water. She looked very lonely.

"Behold, a parable," said the woman to the man. "He has tired of the game; not she. There is no other little boy to blow bubbles to, and if there were she has no pretty bubbles left to blow. Eternal relation of sexes! Poor little girl!"—New York Tribune.

LAST NIGHT'S PLAY

Was Not Exactly An Epoch Maker.

The Day of Atonement by Phil. F. Rogaway presented last night at the Grand Opera House with the author in the leading role was an ignominious failure. The play, while it contains some good passages, lacks coherence and continuity in the plot and the attempt of its author to play a star role was like the feat of the fabliau actor who borrowed a pair of wings and essayed to fly. Between the second and third acts Mrs. Hallie F. Hinges sang "The Holy City," in a most pleasing manner and responded with an encore which also elicited warm applause. Her appearance was the one redeeming feature of the event. Over the rest of the performance we draw the veil of charity, the local talent engaged being the only redeeming feature.

Hop Growers Election

The Oregon Hop Growers Association elected a full board of directors, composed of the following:

W. H. Egan, of Brooks; George K. Hovenden, of Hubbard; James Winstanley, of Salem; Francis Feller, of Battelle; M. J. Jones, of Brooks, and J. R. White and Charles McCormick, of Woodburn.

The directors met and elected the following officers: W. H. Egan, president; George K. Hovenden, vice president; James Winstanley, secretary, and Francis Feller, treasurer.

An amendment to the by-laws was adopted, reducing the number of shares necessary for a quorum. It was the sense of the stockholders in attendance that the association was stronger than ever, and that its work has been of material benefit to the hop growers of Oregon during the past year, and great enthusiasm prevailed among them.

Hon. W. H. Egan, president of the Association, delivered an address on "Hop Growing in Oregon, and the Benefits of Organization and Co-operation," which struck a popular chord.

Is There Poisoned Feed?

The city losing one of its fire team, and other horses being taken suddenly and seriously sick raises the question whether there is not some smutty grain or poisonous feed being used. It is well known that sometimes mouldy or partly decayed barley, oats or other grain is mixed in the feed that is ground and sold for horse food. The Dairy and Food inspector should look into this as it is a crime to sell such stuff to make rations for dumb animals.
