FURNISH OR CHAMBERLAIN, WHICH?

The Democratic state convention will today nominate Geo. E. Chamberlain for governor, and there will be a square contest for that office between him and the Republican nominee, Wm. J. Furnish, of Umatilla county. After the manner in which party lines have been broken in Oregon, the election as between these two gentlemen is not going to be a party contest. The way in which Mr. Furnish's nomination was brought about, virtually at the dictation of the predominant faction at Portland, and by excluding the other faction from participation in the county and state conventions, under the unit rule, will leave a large number of Republicans under no special constraint to vote their party ticket. But, on the other hand, the Republican faction that two years ago made Mr. Chamberlain's election possible, and defeated the regular Republican ticket, are this year back of Mr. Furnish, and are opposed in Multnomah county by the regulars in coalition with the Democrats. In other words, the Chamberlain Republicans of two years ago are this year the Furnish Republicans, and anti-Furnish Republicans will support Mr. Chamberlain.

As Multnomah county has decided the composition of the Republican state ticket, so Multnomah county may decide the state election. What has Multnomah county at stake? The senatorship and the exposition? For senator the plan is doubtless to defeat Mr. Simon and name Mr. Scott, the newspaper man of that town. Mr. Scott's friends, after life-long relations with Mr. Simon, find he is too small, or too large, a man to suit their plans. They say Mr. Scott is about the right size. Without entering into the merits of the two men, who are better known to our readers than this writer, it is safe and fair to say that Portland Republican politicians now in control of the affairs of the Republican party want Mr. Scott to be senator, and all Portland wants at least a million dollars for the Lewis and Clark Exposition. Mr. Furnish would doubtless favor both propositions. Mr. Chamberlain, for governor, could not favor Mr. Scott for senator, by appointment or otherwise. As a Portland man he could not do otherwise than let the million dollar appropriation for the exposition become a law. Yet, he might find it a stumbling block in the way of his election. The farmers might ask him on the canvass to veto that measure.

How could any man that must be left to the legislators. The farmers would demand a veto, or the Republicans among them would vote for their candidate. But Mr. Chamberlain would have a way out by saying, adopt the initiative and referendum amendment, and then you can kill the appropriation yourselves if you don't want to stand the tax. But Mr. Chamberlain could never go on record as opposed to that measure and get the votes of the people of Portland enough to insure his election.

Now what would be the position of the state government, so far as the appointive power is concerned, if Mr. Furnish were elected governor? It is well understood that the secretary of state belongs to the Fulton-Scott faction in this fight that nominated Furnish. If Furnish is governor that faction would have a majority of the two boards that control all the state institutions, including the state prison. That faction would make a clean sweep of these institutions. No one who fully comprehends the animus of Portland politicians could doubt for a moment. The same faction would have control of all the educational institutions of the state, and there is no evidence that they would not use their appointive power in the same manner, and as it has not been used to any great extent for the past four years. With Mr. Chamberlain elected governor, the Scott-Fulton faction would not be in the majority on those boards. Mr. Chamberlain would control the state prison and Soldiers' Home, and a great many other appointments that have been vested in the governor. The Journal wants the people who read its columns to consider this situation from a business standpoint, not as against Furnish or Chamberlain.

The Journal believes that the people have a right to all the light that a public newspaper can throw on the situation. Politics in Oregon are not carried on with the fairness that prevails in some states. The desire to use power for personal purposes is predominant in the minds of political managers, and the people have a right to check them in any way they can. It is certain that the last legislature cost the people over half a million dollars more than it had any business to cost. If Governor Goer had vetoed at least a half million of unjust appropriations he would have come nearer being governor a second time. The same faction that predominated in the last legislature predominated in the Republican state convention. Will they run the Furnish state administration as they did that legislature? They will hardly do as badly as that, but it is an open question whether Mr. Furnish would be a governor for the people or for a faction. In his canvass Mr. Furnish may make it plain to the people that he would hold a club over those who have nominated him, and be governor of the state in fact, as well as in name. As for Mr. Chamberlain, he would be free to be a veto governor if he saw fit to be.

There is but one serious objection to Mr. Chamberlain for governor, and that is if he should become governor, and then turn his patronage over to a certain push that dominates the councils of the Democratic party. If he did that he would not benefit the state—in fact he would work it an incalculable injury. The Oregon state prison is an ill-constructed and unsanitary institution at best. In charge of an ignorant stripe of politicians it would become a disgrace to the state. The state school land management is not going to be any too good under the most favorable conditions. In the hands of a certain faction of the Democratic party it would continue all the worst abuses. If Mr. Chamberlain would rise above this predominant element of the Democratic machine, and give the people a real genuine, business citizens' administration, he would be a governor worth having. That question stares him in the face, because the people of Oregon will not elect a governor for Democracy "as she exists," and has so many times manifested herself in old Webfoot. If he can make the people understand that he would be an independent governor four years for the people, it would make a great deal of difference with the result of the election.

THAT REMARKABLE "NOTHING IN IT."

People are still trying to figure out the meaning of the Oregonian's remarkable editorial headed "Nothing in It" throwing cold water on the flat salary reform plank of the Republican platform.

The article was double meaning, to say the least, and was plainly notice to the faction of the Republican party that the Oregonian is now espousing that they needn't break their necks to keep this pledge.

But the Oregonian and all who are devoted to indifference to flat salary reform will find that the people believe there is something "in it" and that this reform will go through the Oregonian oppose it.

In fact the people are not going to wait until their great and only reform organ says they can have this reform. The Oregonian is going to be in favor of spreading the Lockwood primary law all over the state but the people will never stand it.

Flat salary reform and a direct primary are two things the people demand and will have whether the Oregonian thinks there is anything "in it" or not.

GOING SLOW ON ARID LANDS.

The State Land Board is not acting in great haste to confirm the contracts proposed by a number of private corporations that want large tracts of land under the Carey land act.

These companies want liens created on tracts of from sixty to a hundred thousand acres of arid lands, that home-seekers will be compelled to pay with interest and large profits to attorneys before they get title.

The new law that will pass congress will be a government ownership measure, that will not put the settler and producer at the mercy of the private corporation.

The farmer who raises products on irrigated lands cannot compete with others in agriculture and fruit growing if he has to pay rents to irrigation corporations.

Between private corporations controlling the water and the means of transportation to market the producer is ground between two millstones and the state will do well to not be a party to the scheme.

FOR AN OPERA HOUSE.
Eugene Commercial Club Discussed the Proposition.

The Commercial Club held a special meeting last night for the purpose of discussing the matter of erecting a building for the club's permanent home and for an opera house.

Such a proposition has been under consideration for some time, but it has never been discussed in open meeting before last night. It was decided that if the citizens of Eugene will put up a building sufficient for an opera house and club rooms, the club will lease the rooms at a liberal figure. The trustees are instructed to secure plans and probable cost of building of an opera house and club rooms to be reported at the regular meeting Monday night.

As stated before, several of our capitalists are figuring on the erection of a building for the above purpose, and some action will no doubt be taken in the matter in a very few days.—Guard.

The enlisted force of the navy is to be increased 3000, under the new naval appropriation bill.
