AMERICAN MILLING
INDUSTRYHampered By Narrow-
Minded Protection

Twenty-five-cent Tariff on Every Bushel Exported

Immense Wheat Supply of the United States.

William C. Edgar has contributed a strong article to the Northwestern Miller, of which he is the editor, from which we quote as follows:

The business of making flour is an industry which deserves well of the American people for various reasons; one being its self-reliance in asking no favors in the way of the protective tariffs. It has prospered without demanding tribute in protection from American citizens. It has asked no special legislation, and it is marked above other large industries by a total absence of trusts or trust methods.

All millers, large and small, are independent. If a large plant is unable to place its surplus abroad, it is compelled to dispose of it in the domestic markets. This displaces an equal amount of the smaller mill's product, and results in increased competition and decreased profit. For this reason the trade is dependent upon foreign markets for its prosperity; for, although the export of flour is not equal to the home consumption, an obstruction to the foreign trade would turn the surplus into domestic channels, and result in over-production or congestion, which would be alike disastrous to all classes of millers.

The American miller has far outstripped his competitors in all other countries. His industry and enterprise earned for him a market abroad, where in spite of prejudice and the keenest competition he has conquered trade, and held it until driven out by prohibitory tariffs levied in retaliation for similar tariffs imposed by his own country. His product today stands higher than the flour of any other country; and given fair field, and no favor, he can manage to distance all rivals.

Milling is one of the American industries which does not depend upon protection, and which only asks that it be given a fighting chance in its contest for the favor of the world's markets.

It is a very conservative estimate to say that, thanks to the activity of her millers, the one state of Minneapolis received in 1900 over $20,000,000 of foreign gold which was paid for her flour by Britain, the Netherlands, Germany, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Finland, and other countries in Europe to which this product was shipped.

All this large and constantly increasing traffic, redounding to the benefit of the grain growers, the operatives, the railways, the banks, the machinery makers, and the people of the state generally, is of comparatively recent development, the result of a quarter of a century's enterprise and industry.

Not one dollar of it is the result of protective tariffs. The milling industry of the Northwest, as well as of the United States as a whole, has been built up not by, but in spite of our country's protective policy.

So far as the export flour trade is concerned, the policy of protection has worked to its disadvantage. In return for high tariffs on our part many markets have been closed to flour.

Narrow-minded protection has built between the mill which needs the market a wall consisting of an absurd tariff of twenty-five cents on every bushel of wheat that passes the boundary. This duty kills the trade, and limits the milling development of Minnesota. It will ultimately compel Minnesota to relinquish its place as a flour producer, divert the march of progress to other and alien lands, and make of that which should be a beneficent and threatening and increasing menace. This is protection's reward to the American miller for his years of acquiescence in a high tariff policy. This is the ultimate effect of protection on an industry which is not protected.

The narrow-minded national policy which has restricted and shackled the millers in their efforts to build up a foreign trade is now being used to cut off their supply of raw material, and to forbid an extension of their industry which would otherwise naturally follow.

To obviate the danger which threatens American milling interests from the north, there is but one course. The free admission of raw material is the sole remedy. Milling in bond under present regulations, is impracticable, and almost impossible. Millers who undertake it will find it too cumbersome and expensive to be profitable, the margin on flour at best being but slight.

Free wheat would at a glance seem to be the advantage of the American wheat grower. It would seem that, if Canadian wheat entered Minneapolis markets freely, the immediate result would be a decline in price. But the obvious is not always true. The fact is that should this surplus wheat be refused entry into America, the result would be quite the same in the long run. If it goes abroad to be ground it will affect Minneapolis quite as much. Should foreign mills be enabled thereby to cut off American export trade both in wheat and flour. The result would be a decline in the price of wheat in America. With a lessened value would come a lessened wheat acreage. In time the American wheat raiser, like the American miller, would find himself restricted to a mere local market, and his proud career as the world's great food producer would be as a tale that is told. The American farmer may admit Canadian wheat free or he may deny it entry; but, so long as the wheat is produced, he will, so far as the price goes, perish just the same.

With the protective tariff removed and free Canadian wheat secured the prospect is a grand one. Assured of their future supply of raw material, the mills of America would go forward on their developing course, continuing the march of progress which has brought them to the front.

Bird Protectors
Are Around

Complaint has been made to the Salem Bird Society of the wholesale killing in the Kaiser neighborhood of harmless song birds, such as the Purple Finch, Summer Warblers and Waxwings. In justification of his promiscuous slaughtering of birds, the farmer, whose name was not learned, claims that the birds were destroying his cherries, but the complaint is not accepted as substantial, for the reason that the cherry crop has not ripened, and the birds do not disturb the fruit until it has matured. Officers of the Salem Bird Society this morning notified L. P. W. Quimby, of Portland, state fish and game warden, of the depredations, and it is expected oficial steps will be taken to prevent the further killing of these beautiful and harmless song birds.

Government by Grub.

While the Senate refuses to consider the general demand of the people of the United States for a change in the method of electing members of that body, there are many signs which go to indicate that before long, not only the Senate, but the House of Representatives as well, may receive a gentle jolt that will cause members of these august bodies who imagine that they are little bigger than the people to "take a tumble to themselves," to use a vulgar phrase. The celebrated "steering committee" of congress recently received a little jar of this kind, which gave it quite a shock. More recently, the committee on rules of the House, which has been under the impression that it was running things, was forced to make an ignominious backdown, and agreed to appoint a day for the consideration of several measures of importance, including the Pacific cable bill and rumblings of late among the independent members of Congress, somewhat similar to the promontory symptoms which foreshadowed the outbreak of Mont Pelée, and the would-be bosses at Washington are wise in recognizing these symptoms, which are but an evidence of discontent with present rules and regulations that has long been accumulating.

It is indeed high time that there should be something of a reform in congressional methods and a return to something like the democratic simplicity and straightforwardness which marked the early days of congress. We have had of late a little too much of steering committees and senatorial courtesy. Indeed, it has got to the point where the speaker of the House has become such an autocrat that an individual member of congress has not the ghost of a show of securing a hearing for a measure, unless he stands in the good graces of that official. If this is democratic government, then it is a queer kind of Democracy.

As to the Senate, it has been assuming too much the character of a rich man's club. An amusing instance of this kind was recently reported in a dispatch to the Times from Washington. For many weeks there had been upon the Senate calendar a bill establishing an assay office at Portland, Or. It was Senator Mitchell's bill, and he could not get the Senate interested in it at all. His constituents clamored for that assay office, and the Senate remained indifferent. The situation was becoming serious. One morning Senator Mitchell went into the Senate and privately told the senators that he had received a forty-pound salmon from Oregon, and that he proposed to feast the entire Senate on that splendid fish in the afternoon. So, after Senator Hear had finished speech, motion was made that the Senate take a recess for thirty minutes, and the Senators retired to the restaurant, where Mitchell's fish was discussed. When the Senate reassembled, it was the unanimous opinion of the honorable members that Mr. Mitchell's fish and Mr. Mitchell's measure were both good things, and he was allowed to push the latter along.

A little less false courtesy and a little more common sense seems to be the pressing need in the United States Senate, just now.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. A Comparison

If you hire a man to work for you and specify that his working hours be from seven to six, and he persisted in coming to work at ten and quitting at four, would you keep such a man in your employ or would you fire him?
Yet you give a printer a job of printing and specify that it be done by a certain date, nine chances out of ten you get the job several days after the time specified.
Can you see the drift of our argument?
