Two Hundred Men Buried In a Mine At Johnstown

Explosion of Fire Damp the Cause--- Deadly Gas Prevents Rescue

Men Were Seated Eating Their Lunches When Caught in the Fiery Trap

BORRESON CONTROL OF THE PROPERTY OF THE PROPER

Johnstown, July 11.-At dawn today the bodies of 40 victims of the Cambria mine horror were brought up. The rescue party counted forty more, but could not reach them on account of the deadly gas. Some say 100 more bodies are beyond reach in the impenetrable region of death. Others place the estimate at fifty more, but it is safe to say the loss will pass 150, and may reach 200. The scenes around the mouth of the mine, when the bodies were brought up, are heartrending. The wives, mothers and children of the dead had gathered early, and when the first body appeared made for it with pitiful shrieks and lamentations. The entire police force of the city and that of the Iron Company were present to keep the frantic women back. The faces of the dead are a deep scarlet. All of the poor fellows had their hands uplifted close to their faces. The head of one of them was completely blown off.

Seattle, July 11 .- The sheriff's posse which surrounded the hill where Tracy is hiding, near Kent, exchanged shots with him at midnight. The men are all expert marksmen and woodsmen, familiar with the country, employed around the hill. The bloodhounds are on the trail. Tracy tried to board a freight train on the grade at 5 o'clock this morning, but failed, and retreated into the brush on the hill top. The sheriff believes he has Tracy where escape is impossible.
