Champoeg Murder Trial Will Be Heard in October

Vigorous Fight By State for Immediate Hearing

After hearing affidavits and counter-affidavits, Judge Burnett this morning continued until the October term of court, the trial of John F. Markley, who is charged with the murder of his former business associate, John D. Fain, at Champoeg, on June 25th.

The state was represented by John H. McNary, deputy prosecuting attorney, and C. M. Inman, who will be associate counsel with the state in the prosecution. Mr. McNary insisted upon an immediate hearing of the case, and, in support of his assertion that the feeling against Markley was not so intense that a fair trial would be defeated, presented affidavits from F. E. Osborne, John Shick, C. W. A. Jette and Smith. McNary alleged that no satisfactory grounds had been cited by the defense upon which a continuance might be asked. There was nothing in the affidavits to show that the defense would have any additional testimony by the October term. The proper proceeding to take was to make application for a change of venue.

John A. Carson, for the defendant, offered three counter-affidavits to show that a hostile feeling prevailed against Markley in Champoeg and vicinity. Mr. Carson made affidavit to the effect that the public mind was inflamed by the recent tragedy at the penitentiary, to the extent that an impartial trial of Markley was impossible at this time.

John W. Cochran, a newspaper reporter, in an affidavit, stated that Frank Osborne, the complaining witness against Markley, in an extensive interview with him (Cochran) on the day of the murder asserted that the feeling against Markley over the killing of Fain was intense, and that but for the intervention of Osborne, and the timely arrival of an officer from Salem, Markley would surely have been lynched.

Frank Ireland, a Pinkerton detective, of Portland, who has been employed by the defense, made affidavit that he had visited the scene of the crime and had attempted to interview the principal witnesses for the state and other citizens of the locality, in an investigation of the circumstances surrounding the shooting, but had been unable to get any information, for the reason that Jette seemed to exercise an undue influence over many of those seen, and none would discuss the affair.

J. M. Gearin, of Portland, who is associated with Carson & Adams, of this city, in defending Markley, addressed the court in support of the application for a continuance until October. In his argument, he made the distinction between a case already set for trial for which a continuance was asked, and a case that had not yet been set for trial. This was a preliminary application for the setting of the case within the discretion of the court, and in support thereof it was not necessary to give statutory grounds. He made a strong plea for a postponement of the case until the October term in the interest of justice. Markley had been charged with an awful crime, of which he claimed to know nothing, and it was only right that the defense be given adequate time in which to investigate the circumstances surrounding and leading up to the killing of Fain, in order that Markley's case might be fully presented when called for trial.

After the conclusion of Mr. Gearin's remarks, Judge Burnett announced that the case would be continued until the October term of court.

History of the Case.

At an early hour Wednesday morning, June 25th, John D. Fain, a retired merchant, of Champoeg, was shot and killed at the rear of the store of John F. Markley, his former partner. Markley was arrested charged with the crime. He protested his innocence, but, upon the showing made at the coroner's inquest, all of the evidence being of a circumstantial character, the jury charged Markley with the crime. The accused man was given a preliminary examination before Justice O'Donald, who held the suspect to the circuit court without bonds.

Markley was arraigned in the circuit court, and made application for a continuance of his case until October term of court. The consideration of the application and the time for entering a plea were fixed for Monday, July 7th. Markley pleaded not guilty, and in support of his application for a continuance of his case until October, claimed that he could not receive an impartial trial at the time because of the intense feeling that existed against him, a feeling that was even embittered by the recent homicide at the penitentiary. The court held that in the absence of the consent of the state's attorney to the desired continuance, it was incumbent upon the defense to make a showing why the extension of time should be allowed. Counsel for defendant filed a number of affidavits embodying the objections above mentioned. Counter affidavits were filed by Prosecuting Attorney Hart and his deputy, John H. McNary. Judge Burnett continued the further consideration of the case until 9 a. m. today.

SALEM PEOPLE TALK OF DR. DARRIN

When a few months ago rumors of the marvels that were being wrought in the offices of Dr. Darrin, at the Willamette Hotel, Salem, began to spread in this community, investigation was made; Dr. Darrin, his patients and his references were interviewed. Among the latter, as then stated, were men and women in all walks of life, and they all told the same story of quick and positive cure or benefit. To listen to them Dr. Darrin has a first mortgage on a fame that will endure. Dr. Darrin is daily in receipt of letters couched in the same spirit. The following letter was received by him from Mrs. Henrici, a prominent lady of the town of Montaville.

Dr. Darrin: Seven years ago, in Portland, I was under your electrical medical treatment for discharging ear and deafness of eight years' standing. You cured me, and I have never had a return of the trouble. My husband was treated at the same time for kidney trouble and lame back of three years' duration. All known remedies failed to cure him, until he took your treatment. He has never had a return of his ailment. Our address is Montavilla, Or., formerly St. Helens, Or. 4 MRS. F. D. HENRICI.

SHAW BEATS GOODALE

Private Corporations Must Prove An Organization

Judge O'Day, Of Portland, Will Not Go to Jail

The Oregon supreme court at noon today rendered four opinions as follows:

Goodale Lumber Company, a corporation, vs. W. A. Gray, appellant; appeal from Marion county; Geo. H. Burnett, judge; opinion by Chief Justice Moore; reversed and remanded.

This was an action to recover on a promissory note. In 1895 W. A. Shaw and Wm. H. Smith, Sr., executed a promissory note for $450 to J. C. Goodale, who subsequently assigned it to the Goodale Lumber Company. At the trial of the case in the lower court a single witness testified having affixed his signature as a witness to a document, purporting to be articles of incorporation for the plaintiff company. The court overruled the objection of the defense to this testimony, and held that it was sufficient evidence of plaintiff's existence as a corporation. In passing upon the case the court holds that the filing with the county clerk and the secretary of state of copies of the articles of incorporation, while evidence of the existence of the corporation, it should have been shown that the incorporators had carried into effect the purposes specified in the articles. The opinion holds that at the trial of the case it was necessary to prove the execution and acknowledgement of the articles in triplicate, and the filing thereof with the county clerk and the secretary of state. The articles of incorporation, alone and unsupplemented by other proof, is held to be inadequate to prove the existence of a corporation, and in this respect the lower court erred in its instructions to the jury. It was also incumbent upon the plaintiff corporation to have introduced testimony showing that it had been regularly organized by the election of officers. The court finds that the testimony was sufficient to establish plaintiff's organization as a corporation, and the lower court having erred in not granting the defendants a judgment for non-suit, and in giving certain instructions to the jury, the case is reversed and remanded.

State of Oregon, respondent, vs. Thos. O'Day and L. H. Tarpley, appellants; escheat case; and State of Oregon, respondent, vs. Thos. O'Day and L. H. Tarpley, contempt case; appeals from Multnomah county; John B. Cleland and Arthur L. Frazier, respectively, judges; opinion by Justice Bean; reversed.

This case resulted from the settlement of an escheat case, in which Judge Thomas O'Day, of Portland, was adjudged guilty of contempt and sentenced to jail. He appealed the case, and the supreme court reverses the judgment of the lower court.

A. S. Hough, as administrator of the estate of Enoch L. Moon, deceased, respondent, vs. The Grants Pass New Water Light & Power Company, a corporation, appellant; appeal from Josephine county; H. K. Hanna, judge; opinion by Justice Wolverton; affirmed.

Ellis G. Hughes, appellant, vs. Chas. E. Ladd and T. B. Pratt, respondents; appeal from Multnomah county; J. B. Cleland, Alfred F. Sears and M. C. George, judges in joint session; opinion per curiam; affirmed.

LONG LOST STEEL TRAP.

Carried Off Thirty Years Ago by a Coon, Found In a Tree.

Thirty years ago George Emory, then a noted trapper in Franklin county, lost a steel trap which he had set for coon, says a Frankfort (Ky.) dispatch to the Cincinnati Enquirer. The other day a young man who was cutting timber on a farm three miles from where the trap had been lost saw an iron chain hanging from a tree which he had just cut. Through curiosity the tree was cut into, and several inches under the surface was found a perfectly preserved steel trap.

An examination revealed the name of George Emory cut in the steel. It was taken to Mr. Emory, who identified it as the trap he had lost thirty years before. The coon had evidently carried it away and into the forks of the tree, when the growth of the tree gradually imbedded it.

Vogue of the Colonial.

The rage for colonial, both in furniture and architecture, still reigns supreme. Our English cousins have the same fad, only under another name. They call it "the early Georgian" over there. The private stateroom of the king on his new yacht, the Victoria Albert, has been decorated in this style, white enamel, old time chimney piece with antique brass fender, poker, tongs, etc. The carpet and silk hangings are blue, with the chairs covered in blue morocco. The furniture is of mahogany, except the bed, which is silver.

New Cure For Fat Women.

The latest London novelty is the "somersault cure" for fat women. A west end surgeon's house has been fitted up as a luxurious gymnasium, where aristocratic patients turn somersaults on Swedish principles in the hope of reducing their obesity. "The cure" is said to be most efficacious.

Old Rooms In New Palaces.

The craze for building old rooms that possess interesting historical associations in the new palaces of the twentieth century Midases is in danger of being overdone by the newly rich miner, who proposes to erect within his parlor, on the Fifth avenue highlands, the identical log cabin in which he was born, says the New York Press. May be have the microbes with it!

Novel Use For Clay.

The newest use to which clay has been put is that of making violins and mandolins, says the Detroit News-Tribune. It is said that their tones are softer and more melodious than those made of wood and that they possess the advantage of not being affected by the weather. They are made at the earthenware factory of Screnewitz.
