NEW YORK MURDER MYSTERY

Circumstances Point to the Husband As Perpetrator

Woman Was Lured to a Room Murdered for Her Jewels

New York, Sept. 19.—The police believe the man who hired a rig at the livery stable murdered Mrs. Lillian Kingston where the body was found in the canal yesterday. The rig has not been located. The police detective force is working on the case. The woman had received attentions from other men than her husband.

New York, Sept. 18.—New developments in the case of Mrs. Pulitzer, known as Mrs. Kingston, came to light this afternoon, when Charles Evans, a Hoboken liveryman, said that the strap and weight were taken from his rig, which was rented from him Wednesday night, and returned late Thursday morning. He described the man accurately. The officers first believed him to be her husband. Evans said "no," when confronted.

The police are now certain that the woman was murdered in New York shortly after she left home. They think the murderer lured her to his room, and murdered her for her diamond ear-rings Wednesday morning. He kept the body in the room all day Wednesday, and finally packed it in a trunk for disposal. He then went to Hoboken, hired a rig and threw the body into the ditch.

He made the trip to the Crystal Palace in 25 minutes, a distance of seven miles.
