Come and See Them.

Easy to See Through.....

Yes, when eye glasses are correctly adjusted, fitted and finished they are easy to see through. But if they are simply thrown together, as is the case with so many, sight is often ruined. The way to prevent this is to go to the right place, where only skill and the most scientific instruments are employed in adjusting these most important of nature's helpers. We have all the latest contrivances known to the scientific world for improving the sight, and we have the necessary skill for using them. No mistake made here, not because we are smarter than other people, but because we are provided with the necessary helps. If your eyes trouble you in the least consult

6 Great Lines FOR Fall-Winter

That was to have been the heading of a 6-column, 5-inch ad. that I intended running in the current weekly and in this daily, but it proved utterly impossible for me to find time to write the matter in time. We will try to tell you more in detail next week, meanwhile will merely mention the lines to which we refer. Here they are: BENICIA HANCOCK DISC PLOWS, SYRACUSE CHILLED GANG PLOWS, MONITOR DOUBLE DISC DRILLS, FAIRBANKS-MORSE GASOLINE ENGINES.

HERO FANNING MILLS, EMPIRE CREAM SEPARATORS. It used to be said that an implement dealer in the Willamette valley hadn't much to do in the winter months but sit about the fire and wait for spring. That isn't the case with us. Last winter--my first winter in the business, we had a splendid trade the season through, simply by virtue of pushing seasonable goods. This year we propose to send out more goods than any two implement houses have ever sent out in the same length of time. We do this by keeping everything at it. These fall days we are as busy as during the heaviest spring trade. Wagons, hacks, disc plows, gasoline engines, and all the other good things we carry, are bringing the best trade to our doors. Come and see us when you want anything in the line of implements. It does one good to make comparisons, if we can't sell the goods, we will treat you courteously, for maybe we can sell you next time. Write us for catalogues of anything in our line.

STATE POLITICS ACTIVE

Prominent Republican Leaders at the Capital

Refuse to Talk About the Special Session

Senator Fulton was in the city today in company with Senator Brownell and Senators Booth and Kuykendall and left on the same train that brought the gentlemen from the basin regions, where the dog salmon leap and the gill-netters vote.

None of the gentlemen were hanging around Governor Geer's office, but seemed to be busy in conference with state officials and prominent men in other parts of the building.

All efforts to interview them came to naught. Senator Fulton turned interviewer, and asked The Journal man how he was coming on with his special session. The latter said it was not a special session he was fighting for, but flat salaries, and that was the only way to get them.

O. Frank Paxton, who engineered the lighting contract for all the state institutions, was in town, and it is expected that subject will be made prominent before the legislature. An effort will be made to extend the contract for ten years, and it will be one of the hardest matters that will be fought over at the session.

Geo. C. Brownell, who conducted the Geo. W. Davis school land defalcation, was asked if that subject would be taken up at the regular session. He had nothing to say. Asked if it would be taken up at the special session, he said he did not know.

It is believed by some of the local Republicans that Governor Geer is developing more strength than the combine in control of the legislature had expected, and they are casting about to find the surest means of defeating his aspirations for the senate.

A Salem Republican, who was a leading Frenchman, but who is now for Geer, said today that an investigation of the school land business would be undertaken at the regular session for the purpose of switching Geer as a senatorial possibility, and when they got through with him he would be a minus quantity. He still held the cards while he was governor, and was foolish to not play them. He would get no sympathy, and deserve none, if he did not show a master hand against the same men who led him to a finish in the state convention, and would do him again.

SALEM BOY IS DROWNED

Johnnie Harris, Pantry Boy On the Pomona

Fell Into River at Portland Monday Evening

Johnnie Harris, the 16-year-old son of J. S. Harris, of North Salem, fell off the steamer Pomona, in Portland, about 8 o'clock Monday evening, and was drowned.

The lad entered the employ of the O. C. T. Company about four months ago, and was assigned to the Pomona as pantry boy, and he was serving in that capacity at the time of his death. In attempting to pass from the upper to the lower deck, from the outside of the boat, Johnnie fell into the river between the boat and the dock, and was drowned before help could reach him. The parents of the boy were notified last night, and Mr. Harris went to Portland this morning, and will bring the body to Salem, when it is recovered. At the last report received this afternoon the body had not been recovered.

The boy was a good lad, and a general favorite among the steamboat men, who are grieved over his sad drowning. They unite with the community in extending their sympathy to the family in their bereavement.

A Little Misunderstanding.

Soon after the convening of a new session of congress announcement was made of the approaching marriage of Anson G. McCook, who was then secretary of the senate. A subscription was immediately started among the senators for the purchase of a wedding present. Two or three prominent senators volunteered to collect the money. Senator X., one of the richest men in the senate at that time, was one of these.

Seeing a new senator who had not been approached on the subject, Senator X. went to him and said, "Senator Blank, I want you to give me $25."

"What for?" demanded the new member.

"For McCook's wedding present," explained Senator X.

"All see you about it tomorrow," answered Blank, with a smile, and said, "Senator Blank, I want you to give me $25."

"What for?" demanded the new member.

"For McCook's wedding present," explained Senator X.

A CASE OF IDENTITY

Copyright, 1932, by C. B. Lewis

The postmaster at Clayton at the time I write of and for two years previously was a single man, thirty-five years old, named Henry Day. He made his home with a widow named Martin, who had three children. As postmaster he was known to every man, woman and child for five miles around, and you would say that his identity could be proved above any other man's. One morning Day was missing, and within an hour the widow started the community by charging him with attempted assault and robbery. Her statement was to the effect that she had been awakened about midnight and found him in her room. She said that Day received $2,000 in cash, and he demanded the money. When she cried out, he struck her with a club, and during the few minutes she was unconscious he secured the money and fled. Did any one doubt her story? Was there the slightest reason to suspect she could be mistaken? She had seen him and heard his voice. So also had Frank and Mattie as he left the house. He had taken a freight train which passed the station at 1 o'clock a. m., and the station agent had even spoken to him. As he was the only passenger, the conductor and two brakemen could fully identify him. Was there ever a plainer case?

It was three weeks before Mr. Day was overhauled and brought back for trial. He was not even frustrated. He calmly denied that he was Henry Day. He denied that he had ever been in Clayton. Indeed he was so cool and so sure that the officers, who knew him as well as they knew their own children, began to doubt if he were really the man before they started back. The prisoner declared the officers mistaken, but made no objection to returning with them. There were 500 people at the depot to see him. Every one recognized him as Henry Day. Next day he was arraigned before a justice of the peace under that name. He denied it and gave his name as James Bailey. His plea was "not guilty" and he had the best lawyers in the county. The doubt which the officers brought back with them now began to bear fruit. When Mrs. Martin took the stand, she positively identified the prisoner as Day. On cross-examination she began to waver. One of her children swore positively; another "thought so." A clerk in the post-office was just on the stand to identify the prisoner. He was positive at first, ended by doubting. Only two young persons out of thirty called to stand were positive. The defense named a case of mistaken identity. The prisoner declared his name to be James Bailey and that he was born of American parents in Switzerland. He had come to the United States as a tourist and had only been in the country two weeks when arrested. He had about $1,000 in money, some of which was English gold.

When the trial in the higher court came on the crew of the freight train and the station agent were put on the stand. Each set out to be positive. The testimony of the station agent was a fair sample.

"Mr. Jones, you were acquainted with Henry Day?"

"Yes, sir."

"What sort of nose had he?"

"None? Why, a straight nose, sir."

"Sure of this?"

"Yes, sir."

"That will do."

The prisoner in the box had a Roman nose. Did Day have that sort of nose? One half the village said yes, the other half no. The Widow Martin was determined to be positive this time. She not only believed in what she was going to swear to, but a hundred different people had encouraged her in her conviction. This was the way she came to grief.

"You think it was about midnight when you awoke?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, what did you see?"

"I saw the prisoner at the foot of the bed and called out."

"Did you know who it was before you heard his voice?"

"No, sir."

"Well, what did he say?"

"He said, 'I want that money or I'll murder you.'"

"You were greatly frightened?"

"Yes, sir."

"And yet, frightened as you were, you recognized his voice?"

"Yes, sir."

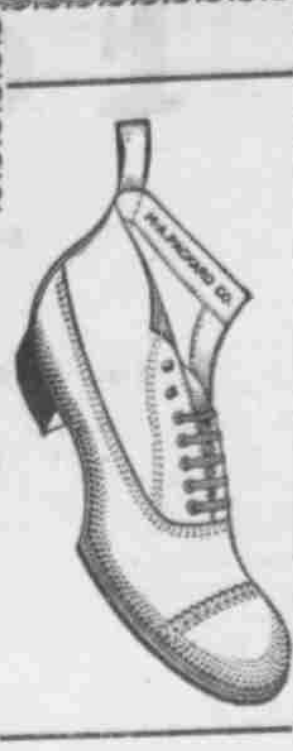

"Well, let us see if there is any similarity. Prisoner, you will call out the words used by the man in the bedroom."

"The prisoner complied, seeming to put himself in the other's place, and his words knocked the bottom out of the prosecution. The Widow Martin seemed stupefied as she looked at him. "So you swear that this is the voice you heard in your bedroom, do you?" asked the lawyer.

"I-I CAN'T SAY."

Of the two men who had been positive at the preliminary examination one backed square down, while the other was full of doubts. When the case was closed and the jury went out, eight were doubtful and the other four not very positive, and the result was a verdict of "not guilty." Bailey remained in town for a couple of weeks, meeting everybody as a stranger and wandering around to see the sights, and then went quietly away to be seen no more. Was he Bailey or Day? I have told you how they failed to prove he was anybody but Bailey, and yet he was Day. Years afterward I interviewed him in a South Carolina jail for two days before he was to be tried for burglary, and he acknowledged his identity and laughed heartily over the details of the case.

While we do not claim to carry the largest line of shoes in the city, we do claim to have a complete line of men's fine shoes. The best values for the money to be found in Salem. You have no doubt heard of the Packard Shoe. That is the shoe we are selling. One of the best advertised shoes in the United States. Thousands of dollars have been spent in advertising and introducing this shoe, and the Packard Shoe Co. are not so foolish as to allow the workmanship or quality of the material put in the shoe to fall below the standard, and thereby spoil the sale of their goods. On the other hand, we are assured that their aim is to put the best $2.50 and $3.50 shoe before the public there is in the whole country. And we believe they are doing it. Call and see for yourself, and be convinced.
