Toothpick Habit Has Become Quite Prevalent

Bits of Wood In Demand at Restaurants

We have the drink habit, the card playing habit, the tobacco habit-in fact, habits innumerable, but there is one habit of which little has been said, although it is present among us. It is the toothpick habit, and it is as firmly rooted in those who have it as any of the more objectionable ones. Observe a man coming down Main street early in the morning. He has one of the little bits of wood in his mouth. Now, here is where a little character reading comes in. If he be Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. of a quick high strung, nervous temperament, in a few minutes time he will have chewed up one end of it and turned the other end in his mouth to masticate.

He reaches his place of business or employment, but the toothpick still sticks there, nor does he have his mouth free from one until his stock is entirely exhausted or he is tired out. In the former case a match is resorted to or a few toothpicks borrowed from a neighbor, which he will repay when he obtains a fresh stock at the restaurant where he eats his luncheon

Cool, phlegmatic persons will keep a toothpick in their mouths for sev eral hours. A man of moody or troubled mind will let his toothpick droop listlessly downward; a man with his mind intent upon one thing will close his teeth on it and it will stick out straight, while a happy-golucky person, or one with a mind free from care, will have his toothpick at an upward angle, or constantly shifting about in the mouth. I tell you, that habit is a great index to a man's thoughts and characteristics.

The cashier of a leading cafe, whose desk is right where the box of tooth picks is, says the habit is growing to such an extent as to keep them busy filling the box anew. "And worst of all," she remarked, "they seem unato break themselves of the habit. After gazing furtively around, a man will grab up a handful of toothpicks and hastily thrust them in his vest
