JUDGE ADAMS DECIDES

In Favor of Wabash Trainmen

Says Men Have Undoubted Right to Quit

A Proposition that Heretofore has Never Been Doubted

St. Louis, April 1.—Judge Adams, of the United States circuit court this morning granted the application of the Wabash railway trainmen for a dissolution of the temporary order issued by him recently, preventing them from calling a strike.

Adams reviews both sides, and takes up clause by clause the allegations and denials, and says, inasmuch as the train men deny any intention of interfering with either the interstate commerce or United States mails, but only propose to better their condition, they have the undoubted right to peacefully withdraw from railroad employment until such time as wages which shall be satisfactory are conceded. He says the railway's contention that the men are are satisfied with their wages is not supported. The question as to whether the officers of the railway trainmen, or the men themselves, first suggested an increase of wages and change of rules is immaterial.

Summarizing the rights, duties and privileges of employes, Adams says: "An employe has the unquestionable right to place a price and impose conditions upon his labor at the outset of his employment, or, unless restrained by contract obligations, upon the continuance of his labor at any time thereafter. If these terms and conditions are not complied with by the employer he has a clear right either not to engage in, or having engaged in his service, to cease work. They may seek and obtain counsel and advice concerning their rights, duties and obligations in relation to their employer. Persons interested in their welfare may advise, aid and assist them in securing such terms and conditions of service, as may best subserve their interests. What they may do lawfully and singly, they may organize and combine to accomplish. But this right of combination and resulting right to strike is a weapon for defense and protection of the employes, and not a weapon for attack. The clear line of demarcation, recognized by all authorities, that, while it is lawful and permissible to strike, it must not be attended by violence to or destruction of property, or by other coercive measures intended to prevent the employer from securing other employes, or otherwise carrying on his business according to his own judgment."

The decision is regarded as being one of the most important and comprehensive ever issued on the labor question.

Harrisburg, Pa., April 1.—The President's trip is devoid of anything startling. He passed most of the forenoon with Rixey and John Burroughs. A big crowd at the station here demanded a speech. He said he would not begin speech-making until tomorrow, but made a short talk on individual citizenship.

Cambridge Wins by Six Boat Length

And Oxford was Never for a Moment in it

London, April 1.—England's great sporting day, the Cambridge-Oxford boat race dawned with leaden skies, which later turned to drizzling rain. Both crews were out early, limbering up for the race, which is set for 3:30 this afternoon. As the day advanced the rain increased in volume, and thousands of spectators turned back. The river banks had comparatively a desolate appearance. Cambridge was a strong favorite in the betting. There was a new departure in shells, Oxford having a highly polished French craft and Cambridge a black-leaded affair.
