HUNTING LITTLE ELLA

Story of a Stolen Baby that Comes from Chicago

Little Ellen was Stolen while Clinging to Her Mother's Hand but was a Daisy When Found

"My little Ella! My baby, she has been stolen," cried a distracted woman, rushing into Chief of Police O'Neill's office yesterday. "She is the only thing I have in the world. I was paying a water bill and had her by the hand most of the time," continued the woman, wringing her hands and growing hysterical.

Detectives Hamilton and Mullen and all the officers in sight hurried to the aid of the woman, while Secretary Markham endeavored to soothe and reassure her by telling her that her child could not have wandered far, and would certainly be found within the building.

Search was at once instituted, a large force of outsiders who had been attracted by the excitement joining with the officers in the hunt. Every office in the city hall was peered into. The policemen at the doors leading to the streets said no child had gone out of the building alone. Finally the searchers decided to look around the big engines railed off from the main floor.

They had not gone far when they saw the distracted mother rush forward and, with a glad cry, throw her arms around a tall, full-grown young woman, who proved to be the lost, "Little Ella."

"Really, mother," the young woman said, "I can take care of myself, and I don't see the occasion for all this commotion."

A number of people whose eyes had moistened with tears at a parents anguish over the supposed loss of a tottering child were observed to go off in dark corners and silently kick themselves.

After the woman had wept tears of joy over the recovery of her child, she returned to Chief O'Neill's office, thanked the officers, and departed, holding tightly to Ella's hand. The mother gave her name as Mrs. Annie Miller.

OLD NUMBER EIGHT

Comes out in New Dress and is as Handsome as Any

The old car, with wheezy motor and an upper story that threatened to fall down on the passengers if they spoke too loud, has come out of the shops looking like a pay car on the Vanderbilt line.

She's all new paint and varnish, upholstered like the parlor set in a bridal suite, glides as smooth as a dancing master, slips over the bumpy places, and takes her juice like a healthy baby does its bottle.

In appearance No. 8 is as stylish as a well-dressed woman out in her tailor made and millinery, with hair dressing to match. There are no flies on old No. 8, and her best friends wouldn't recognize her.

She is roomy fore and aft, a nice family craft, can carry lots of baggage and hold a big passenger list, with wide spaces for the pastebord and nickel collector to pass the hat.

It was the late Superintendent Brown's last job for the company at Salem, and does him credit, as well as the men in the shops. She had two flat wheels, one lung gone, and her hull was all shot to pieces.

She has been put on the depot run, where she hauls the show people, the politicians and the people of quality who come up from Portland on free passes, and the motormen are all proud of her.

Shop Foreman Michaels, one of the oldest employes on the line, likes her so well he is afraid his wife will be jealous.

Second Day of Confederate Reunion.

New Orleans, La., May 20.—The second day of the annual reunion of the United Confederate Veterans was given over almost entirely to routine business relating to the affairs of the association. Reports were presented and discussed, committees appointed to look after various projects in which the veterans are interested, and during the forenoon and afternoon sessions the delegates listened to stirring addresses delivered by several speakers of note. Promptly at noon, in pursuance of a custom long since established by the association, all business was suspended, and an hour was devoted to a memorial service in memory and in honor of Jefferson Davis and the Daughters of the Confederacy. During the day there were also well-attended meetings by the sons of veterans and the other organizations affiliated with the parent body. Luncheons and drives were numerous for the visiting ladies, and so perfect were the arrangements of the entertainment committee that no one was allowed to find the time hang heavily on his hands. Tonight witnesses another of the elaborate entertainment features, this time a grand ball given by the sons of the veter-
