Truth to Tell
There are no other milk cans made that can equal in wearing qualities the genuine BUHL CANS

They are tinned to stay tinned, and put together to stand years of hard service. Other cans crack easily, become dented, and being lightly tinned soon rust and go to pieces. Not so with the "Buhl Factory." Improved Elgin and "Genuine Iowa." They all outlast any other cans on the market, and are thoroughly and quickly cleaned. Remember, the Buhl is the only can in the world that is made with the Buhl "Victory" Can Breast and the Buhl "Victory" Round Handle. As there are many imitations of this can, we stamp all ours with the Milk Can Trade Mark. Look for it.

EYES EASILY FOOLED

Many are at Least Partially Color-blind

Red the Hardest Color to Distinguish--Nature Uses Stripes and Spots for Concealment

(Pearson's Weekly.)

Captain Sykes of the Yorkshire militia announced recently an odd discovery. He found that an ordinary field gun, if daubed all over with blotches of red, blue and yellow paint, becomes to all intents and purposes invisible, at least at any considerable distance. Six guns and their limbers so painted and streaked with the three primary colors, as they are called, were placed on the Fox hills at Aldershot, and a number of artillery officers invited to locate them.

The distance was only 3000 yards—a mere trifle in actual warfare—and the officers were armed with the best of field glasses. But so perfectly did the painted guns harmonize with the natural background that no one was able to pick them out.

Some horse artillery sent forward to engage the guns never saw them at all until they had reached a point barely 1000 yards away.

Many animals of all kinds take advantage of the way in which sight, especially human sight, confuses colors. The leopard, living in low thickets where the sunlight, broken by leaves, falls in patches on the soil beneath, has a skin blotched with black spots, making the creatures practically invisible except at very close quarters.

Among fish, insects, reptiles and snakes, hundreds of species are known of which their markings render them practically invisible in their natural surroundings.

Partially Color Blind.

Recent researches have shown that a far greater number of people are at least partially color blind than was formerly imagined. The commonest case is a deficient perception of red, blue and violet. Often partially color blind persons name these quite correctly. But they are unable to distinguish between rose red and bluish green.

A few years ago Dr. Favre examined the color perceptions of 1000 railway officials, and found that 98 were quite color blind, and a number more partially so.

Women, it may be mentioned, are hardly ever color blind, but why this is so no one pretends to explain. After any severe nervous shock, you will be very likely to find that you have become temporarily color blind.

Your perception of green light has probably gone, at least partially. White objects will then appear to you of a reddish purple, and green objects to be very much duller in hue than ordinarily.

Anyone can make him or herself color blind by wearing a pair of ruby red glasses. The prolonged action of red light on the eyes ends by tiring out the nerves which receive red light. Consequently, when the glasses are at last removed, rainbow appears to have only two colors, yellow and blue.

Many people have found it difficult to believe in the possibility of the extraordinary attitudes assumed by galloping horses or other creatures in rapid motion, as shown in instantaneous photographs. Here we have another instance of sights which we—that is, our eyes—are unable to grasp.

The Positive Image.

The fact is that though the eye seizes a view with extraordinary rapidity, that view does not pass away at once from the retina. What scientists call the positive image persists for a perceptible period of time, and after it is gone it is replaced by a negative image—that is, the same view, but in colors complementary to the positive image. Thus, if the sight seen was a regiment of scarlet clad soldiers, the negative image would show these soldiers in a greenish blue hue.

So the impression we get when looking at anything is actually made up of a number of different views of the object, whereas the instantaneous photographic plate gives us only one of these views, and hence look to us unnatural.

A small and simple experiment can be tried by any reader which will go far to convince him or her what a debt we owe to color and what a good thing it is we have sunlight, which enables our eyes to take advantage of the beautiful hues of nature. Make a room quite dark and then burn some carbonate of soda in the flame of a Bunsen gas burner. It will burn with an orange yellow light sufficiently strong to illuminate everything in the room, but you will realize with a sudden shock that, bright though the light is, all distinctions of color have vanished. Only light and shade remain. A crimson carnation, a blue violet, a red tablecloth, a yellow blind—all look gray or black or white. The faces of those present look positively repulsive, for all natural color has disappeared.

No other experiment will so well convince those who have witnessed it how great a loss would be that of our sense for color.

Housekeepers are willing to believe the market reports when they say butter closed strong.
