The Whisky Killed Him

Whisky, given him by a white man, is what "Indian Frank" Winneshut declares is responsible for his mad act in murdering his cousin, Pelatt, of the Indian police, at the Warm Springs agency. Deputy United States Marshal Roberts, who escorted the redskin from the scene of the killing to a cell in the county jail, says that Winneshut, previous to the killing, had been regarded as an exemplary Indian. He had been a leader among his tribesmen, especially on festive occasions. The prisoner himself says he has always been a good Indian until the day of the murder, when a white man handed him a bottle of whisky. He drank the stuff and shortly afterwards ran amuck, fatally knifing his cousin and making murderous assaults upon two other Indians before being overpowered. Winneshut asserts that he has not the slightest recollection of the tragedy. He says he came out of a dream and found himself in serious trouble, and if he must die for what he has done, he is ready. He accepts his predicament with the stolid indifference characteristic of his race. The murder, according to eye-witnesses, was cold-blooded and unprovoked. Winneshut and several other young Indians were riding on their ponies near the agency when a white man gave them a bottle of whisky. Winneshut drained the bottle and a few minutes later let out a series of wild yells and gave his pony the reins. Direct to the agency he rode, yelling and flourishing his arms. Several of the Indian police, among them Pelatt, ran out to intercept him. Policeman

Abrahams got the pony by the bridle, but promptly let go when Winneshut unsheathed a hunting knife and made a vicious pass at his throat. Pelatt then sprang upon the drunken man from behind. Winneshut turned in his saddle, and, quick as a flash, buried the knife in Pelatt's throat, causing a wound from which the hapless Indian bled to death in less than an hour. A dozen Indians were on the scene by this time, and the murderer was overpowered and placed in irons.

The tragedy caused great excitement among the Warm Springs Indians, and there was much talk among them of taking him by force from the authorities and giving him an Indian trial. The squaw of the dead man demanded that this be done and with wailing and jeers tried to force the Indians to act; but the agent sent them word that any disturbance would result in the calling of government troops, and the redskins discreetly ceased the disturbance. Had Winneshut been given an Indian trial, he would undoubtedly have been forced merely to pay the dead man's squaw a sum of money in recompense for the killing of her husband, which is the penalty regarded by the Indians as sufficient in cases of murder.

Winneshut speaks English well, having been educated at the agency school, and has always been popular among the Indians. He says he will fight the charge of first-degree murder that has been filed against him, as he insists that it was the whisky and not the Indian that killed Pelatt.

THE KIANGS OF INDIA.

These Wild Horses Are Violent and Said to Be Extinct.

Writing of the kiangs, or wild horses, of India, found near the land of Tibet, Thomas W. Weber in "The Forests of Upper India and Their Inhabitants" says: Here for the first time we saw the kiang, or wild horse. Several herds came to look at us as we marched and galloped around, neighing and kicking up, but kept at a respectful distance. They have big, ugly heads and tails and ears like a mule's and a black stripe down the back; color, light bay, with white noses. They have fine action in trot and gallop and are fourteen to fifteen hands high, strong in the legs and heavy in the body. We were welcomed by the neighing of numerous wild horses to the land of the kiang. Several herds kept circling round, the old stallions approaching in a quite threatening manner, snorting, squealing and kicking up their heels, while the mares and foals galloped off at a more respectful distance. There was a herd of kiangs which circled about our camp in a most objectionable way, making the most fearful disturbances. We witnessed a battle royal between two stallions, which for ferocity and wicked fury surpassed any fight I have seen. Again and again the pair went at one another like tigers, biting and kicking and mauling, the blood flowing freely, while the fearful yells and roars they kept up were terrifying to hear. This went on for hours. The horrible roars and shriekings made by the wild horse when fighting sound something like a noise between a donkey's bray and the squealing of a jackal, but far more ear piercing and dissonant. Here the kiang is found in considerable numbers. He is, according to the Hunia accounts, unmanageable. There was a young one purchased at Bagwan fair from some Hunias for a small price. The purchaser thought he had a good bargain and proposed to send the animal to England, but when his men went to bring away the purchase his power could induce it to leave its foster mother, an old Aheet pony, which the closer Hunias refused to sell except for an exorbitant sum.

Mind is that which perceives, feels, remembers, acts and is conscious of continued existence.

Likes the Silsby. Fire Chief Johnson had the Silsby fire engine out on trial this morning, throwing water from the hydrant at the corner of Court and High streets, and at 7 p. m. the official test of the new boiler will be made from the state house hydrants, when the aldermen will be present, and the fire chief invites the public to attend and see the work of the Silsby since it has been repaired. The chief is highly pleased with the work it is now capable of doing, and feels that he has a fire-fighting machine that, for capacity, cannot be equalled by any engine of the same size and weight.

Satisfactory Shopping

We want "Pattons" to be synonymous with satisfactory shopping—we think it is, but if you don't agree with us we want you to tell us about it. Criticism will be gladly received. We know that our KO DAK SUPPLIES are strictly fresh and of this month's manufacture besides that the prices are right, and we endeavor to serve you well, but we want the relation to be something more than mere buyer and seller. We want you to feel a perfect liberty to come in and look around, and especially at our immense display of photographic goods, for we have everything imaginable.
