The wrecked vessel was a petroleum carrier bound from Philadelphia to Vera Cruz. He said she was struck by a hurricane about midnight Tuesday, and shortly afterward turned turtle. He was on deck and seized a life preserver. When he arose from the whirlpool caused by the sinking he got aboard a piece of the bridge and drifted in the vicinity until rescued. St. Helens Trembled

Kelso, Wash., Sept. 17.—The earthquake felt at this place last Friday was no doubt caused by a disturbance at Mount St. Helens. John Lewis, of Okequa, who recently returned from the mountains, says that there is fire smoldering beneath the surface of St. Helens and that at one particular spot on the mountain the rock is too hot to allow the hand to touch it without causing a burn, and that a hissing noise can be plainly heard and steam issuing from a small fissure.

On Friday at the hour when the slight shock was felt here several parties were near the summit of St. Helens and so severe was the shock that they were thrown to their knees, rocks were hurled in different directions and the trees away to and fro as if in a hurricane.

It is the opinion of many who have recently visited St. Helens that the old mountain will at an early date become a very active volcano.

WIND ABOUT WATER

Irrigators do Lots of Talking Between Drinks

Sorrel Topped Senator From Sagehen State Discusses the Dangers of Aridity

Ogden, Utah, Sept. 17.—The first speaker was Senator Francis G. Nowlands, of Nevada, who delivered an eloquent address on state co-operation with national irrigation. Secretary of Agriculture James Wilson spoke on the work of the department of agriculture regarding irrigation. He was received with rounds of applause. He explained at length the vast amount of experimental work the government is making in all parts of the United States, and especially in the West, for the purpose of discovering the best fruits, grains, etc., adapted to the various climates, so that the best results could be accomplished. The government is also ready to do much for irrigation, and expects irrigators to take advantage of these experiments, and to irrigate in a scientific manner. He urged the building of canals that will not lose so much water by seepage. This water can be saved by lining and fluming canals, and if done, at least one-third more land can be reclaimed by irrigation with water that otherwise is lost. The department is collecting all available data on this subject, and is ready to distribute some of it to irrigators for their education. It will be bottled down and sent out in irrigation and agricultural bulletins.

Some Facts About "Cravenette"

The following process is fully covered by patents, and any one other than ourselves, in this city, using the name "Cravenette" in connection with dress goods, suitings, skirtings, etc., does so to mislead the public. Scientifically speaking, the process of waterproofing cloth is destroying the capillary attraction of the wools or its ability to absorb moisture. In applying the "Cravenette" process to the yarn the entire fibre is water proofed, consequently it is impossible for the woven cloth to absorb moisture or to saturate. No rubber is used in the proofing process, consequently there is no odor nor perspiration. Although rain-proof it is porous to air, and is therefore ventilating, and can be worn in any weather and in any climate. Use nor abuse, heat nor cold, nor age will destroy or impair its water-proof quality.
