The Weather. Fair this afternoon, tonight and Thursday.

She Winked.

She winked at me, a maiden fair; I winked at her; she didn't care. She winked again, and I did, too; I thought it jolly-wouldn't you? For she was just as chic and sweet As any girl you'd care to meet, And though a perfect stranger, yet I felt as if we'd often met. And smiled at her familiarly The while she winked at me.

She winked at me, a saucy wink; Such acts are naughty, you may think:

But I-I rather liked it, so We kept on winking to and fro, First she at me, then I at her, Till winks were flying liveller Than shot in battle. Oh, such fun! She had my heart completely won, And I surrendered willingly Because-she winked at me.

She winked at me-the little flirt! No matter, though, it didn't hurt; No one would censure her for it; Her mamma never cared a bit, And mamma knows precisely what Is strict propriety or not. T would have different been, I own, If she had been a maiden grown;

But she was only eight, you see, And so-she winked at me! -Sidney Warren Mase, in Puck.

Lights mean more intercourse, better attendance at churches and lodges, greater safety to life and property. Let us have the lights.

THE BIKE ORDINANCE DEAD. After the passage of a stringent bicycle ordinance the city council refuses to post notices showing on what walks riding is prohibited.

Alderman Stolz asked the council to order placards posted showing which

This was a srowd move of Alderman Stolz, as his motion got not a sligle vote besides his own, and disclosed that the council had no intention to enforce the law.

THE WALL STREET CALAMITY HOWL.

Business men recognize that prices of materials and labor are too high, that construction work of all kinds is missions under this charter, and must too expensive, and uses up capital too rapidly.

Much work is consequently deferred, and the decline in steel is the first step in an inevitable readjustment to a lower level.

Labor, too, must take its share, Wages and exactions of the unions points under an over-aggressive and over-grasping leadership.

The coming winter is likely to see many idle workmen, and the labor movement, a movement having great possibilities for good has been weakened by its own follies, which will be likely to cause a set-back in its aggressiveness for some time to come.

The present reaction is as much the result of excesses of labor as the exforence; that the penalty of the latter Fungi For Food.

According to current dispatches, an eminent British physician announces that "an entirely new sensation" can be obtained by eating fuss balls, or puff balls. Shades of William Hamilton Gibson! says the New York Tribune. Why, that fungus has been a well-accepted article of food with the elect for a score of years.

The "new sensation" promised to the jaded palates of British gourmands is an old thing here though none the worse for being old. At present only two kinds of fungi are much caten, and they, because of their market cost, are chiefly re served for epicures. One of them, the mushroom, ought to be as common and as cheap as potatoes, and there are many other fungi equally desirable for food, which ought to be upon the tables of all. There are few articles of food at once so delicious to the taste, so grateful to the digestive organs and so nourishing and should be so neglected.
