BROTHERHOOD.

The crest and crowning of all good, life's final star, is Brotherhood; For it will bring again to earth Her long-lost Poesy and Mirth; Will send new light on every face, A kindly power upon the race. And till it comes, we men are slaves And travel downward to the dust of graves. Come, clear the way, then, clear the way! Blind creeds and kings have had their day. Break the dead branches from the path: Our hope is in the aftermath— Our hope is in heroic men. Started to build the world again. To this Event the ages ran: Make way for Brotherhood—make way for Man.

THE SALEM PRESS CLUB.

The entertainment of the state press association by the Salem Press Club was a grand success in every particular and a credit to the city.

No collection was taken up among the business men, as is too often done when it comes to entertaining a convention of this character.

Committees met the visitors at all trains, and said the kindest farewells to them when they departed.

The Salem Press Club also sent all the delegates to the hotels, at reduced rates, and did not entertain the convention at private houses.

The hotels are entitled to all the business possible in a city like Salem, and there is too much dead-end private entertaining of delegates.

The concluding event, of a grand ball at the armory was relished by the editors from all over the state whether they danced or not.

A number of prominent gentlemen and ladies took places in the grand march who had never been on a ball-room floor in their lives and enjoyed it, although not dancing a step. It was a stately and impressive function of a social character.

The musical program and the speaking were all in good taste. The songs were bright and cheerful and the speeches were optimistic. Like the Orientals, the members of the press club are shaking their own hands over the perfect success of their entertainment.

THE PRESS DOES JUSTICE.

The findings of the Salem Board of Health, of but a single well-authenticated case of typhoid fever, again gives the lie to all that the State Board of Health has put into circulation about Salem.

So far not a member of that board that has Dr. Woods Hutchinson for its mouthpiece has had the fairness to disown the slander put on Salem by the state board of health through the Oregonian interviews.

It is to be regretted that the Salem member of the State Board of Health, who was put on the board to protect the interests of the Capital City, has not been more conspicuous in its defence.

The State Board of Health could have advised all towns and cities in the state to use boiled water during the summer months, without singling out Salem unjustly and nailing this city to the wall.

Few people know how extensive and far-reaching has been the effect of the bad advertising Salem has received, and few realize that it will take years to overcome that bad effect.

A Salem business man came home from San Francisco the past week and at every town on the road he was asked if it was really so bad, and if people were dying off like flies from typhoid fever?

Now that several steps have been taken to vindicate the sanitary character and reputation of this city, and all give the lie to the state board of health, has not that body the manliness to undo the great wrong done?

It took a fair-minded Portland newspaper man—J. E. Lathrop, of the Portland Journal—to deal out justice to Dr. Woods Hutchinson, when for half an hour he roasted him with ridicule at the state press reception.

The truth is, the press is more just to all communities than any board or commission can possibly be. It makes its living from all the people and cannot afford to treat any community unfairly.

ART FOR THE SCHOOLS.

Great credit is due to City Superintendent Traver for conducting in our public schools during the past week a fine art exhibition, the first thing of the kind ever undertaken in this city.

The collection of the masterpieces published by the Elison Co., of Boston is very well suited for a school exhibition. They present the best of paintings, sculpture and architecture.

Next to seeing the originals, a large photograph of the original gives the best idea of these great works of art, the originals of which are scattered all over the world, and locked up in private galleries.

The money made from the sale of admission tickets will be invested in pictures for the schools, and thus the public schools of Salem will become the beginning of an art gallery for the children.

Familiarity with the best that the world has to offer in the way of art, will certainly elevate the standards of taste in our schools, both for the teachers and the children and drive out of the schools some of the pictures that have occupied space without any regard to their educational value.

THE LIFE SPIRITUAL.

"And whosoever shall compel thee to go one mile, go with him two." It is because of refusal or reluctance to go the second mile, that much of the trouble and soul-distress is due. A cheerful and hearty yielding and going the second mile would solve many difficulties and bring large blessings into the life. The rich young ruler would not go the second mile neither would the "many of his disciples" that "went back and walked no more with him." Many to-day who have gone the first mile have stopped right there, and refuse to go the second mile even with the Son of God for a companion.—Pacific Baptist.

Rev. Joseph F. Newton says in The Universalist Leader, "The preacher must be a man to whom the great truths are realities and who has the power to make them real to others. The time is past when men must be preached at. Not exhortation but inspiration is what they need. When the real truth is presented, humanity does not have to be exhorted to receive it; that is, if it be presented in appropriate dress. Beauty is the natural garment of truth and, in the last analysis, we must rely upon the divine beauty of truth to win the souls of men."

A knowledge of the Bible and of the history of the Bible is as essential to a general comprehension of present society as to the development of literary taste. If the universities can revive the study of the Bible they will establish a new claim to our respect.—Chicago Tribune.

The cover design of the November Pearson's is a dainty little maiden reproduced from one of Mrs. Adrian C. Hope's pastel portraits of children. A well illustrated article on Mrs. Hope's portrait work opens the number.

A singularly fortunate union of subject and author is seen in the October Atlantic, to which Lyman Abbott contributes an appreciation and personal estimate of Henry Ward Beecher, whom he succeeded in Plymouth Church, and with whom he was for many years an editorial co-laborer.

Edmund Clarence Steadman's "Life on the Floor," the leading article of the November Century, will give acquaintance with the New York Stock Exchange from within, and illustrations by Ernest L. Blumenschein and Otto H. Bacher will add vividness and value to the narrative. Mr. Steadman's membership in the New York Stock Exchange dated from 1869 to 1900.

In the October number of Men of Tomorrow, Albany, N. Y., special emphasis is laid on two things. One, of course, is football. The history of the game is given in interesting style by the athletic editor, hints for training boys of high school age follow. There are two first-rate stories of the gridiron; the sketch of the college hero for the month is a husky New England football captain, and several other pages break loose on the all absorbing topic.

JOURNAL X-RAYS.

Salem stood the Press all right.

Salem has the finest pastry cook in Oregon, and, from the picture and sketch in Saturday's Journal, she is single.

Salem has a Bohemia club. Well. Greater Salem can have anything she wants.

A man writes The Journal from Iowa that things are not booming there as they were, and that money is close. Our experience has been that money is never as close as some of the people who have it.

Eastern people are complaining that money is close. It may be close to some people, but there are a few in Oregon who don't object to familiarity, amounting to even actual contact.

Hon. Jeff Myers is collecting a game exhibit for the Lewis and Clark fair, and was recently in Astoria. Portland will supply the specimens of roulette, faro, draw poker and municipal grafting.

When the parson was consoling the weeping widow, he remarked: "Your husband was one of the best of men. You will never find his like." "No," said the weeping relict, glancing up with tear-bedimmed eyes, "but I am going to try."

The X-Ray man has a kindly feeling for the widows, but here's a pair of good ones on them:

"The Widow Quick married within a fortnight after the death of her last husband. Her weeds have served her twice, and are still as good as new."—Addison.

"Keep yourself from the tumult of the mob, from fools in a narrow way, and from a man that is marked, and from a widow that has been thrice married."—Proverb.

Bed Time.

I take a pleasant herb drink, the next morning I feel bright and my complexion is better. My doctor says it acts gently on the stomach, liver and kidneys, and is a pleasant laxative. It is made of herbs, and is prepared as easily as tea. It is called Lane's medicine. All druggists sell it at 25c and 50c. Lane's Family Medicine moves the bowels each day. If you cannot get it, send for free samples. Address, Orator Woodward, LeRoy, N. Y.

LAST TOKEN OF RESPECT.

Funeral Services at Chemawa Over the Late S. M. Childers—Body Shipped East.

Salem people yesterday afternoon paid their last marks of respect to the late S. M. Childers, farmer at the Indian school, whose death occurred Thursday morning. The funeral services were held in the Odd Fellows' hall, and the local Odd Fellows and Rebekahs, together with the officers of the Indian school, two battalions of the pupils, the band, and a large concourse of Salem friends, attended the services. Rev. Davis Errett, pastor of the First Christian church, to which deceased belonged, preached the funeral sermon, and at the close of the service, the band played a funeral march in the banquet hall, while the people passed by the open casket, to once more look upon the features of the deceased.

At the close a procession was formed, headed by the Indian band and battalions, followed by the hearse and family, the Rebekahs and Odd Fellows bringing up the rear, and in this order the procession passed through the streets to the passenger station, where the casket, covered with floral pieces, was placed in a shipping box, and started East on the 4:34 train, for Franklin, Ill., where interment will be had. Mrs. Childers and Miss Claudia Childers accompanied the remains to Illinois, and Sept. T. W. Potter escorted them as far as Portland.

The funeral was one of the saddest ever witnessed in this city, for deceased had many warm friends, who mourned him as a brother, while the teachers and pupils from the Indian school could scarce repress their grief. Deceased was popular wherever known, and will long be remembered here.

HELEN ADAIR'S IMPRESSIONS.

Fascinating Lace and Beau de Crepe Gowns—The Reign of the Separate Blouse.

After a careful study of the models shown in this fashion center of the world bright, sunny Paris, I have culled the best and most settled features of the leading styles for you, carefully avoiding the over-elaborate and exaggerated styles, which one often sees in so-called fashion plates, and which, if copied, would make the wearer out enough to grieve all judicious beholders.

Exaggeration in dress expresses self-consciousness, which no fashionable woman wishes to display, and nothing is so marked as the exaggerated styles in corsets, which women wear to their discomfort, believing themselves to be smart appearing, when they are only ridiculous. A happy medium that expresses the perfect figure, but does not cry out: "This is a corset!" can and should be found.

Fashionable taste in lace grows more extravagant, and Europe is being ransacked for laces to please milady. Such fascinating beau de crepe and lace gowns as are now to be seen in the Paris shops settles the question as to whether these frocks are to be fashionable this winter.

The exquisite gown in my illustration is of creme white Beau de Crepe and Irish lace. The skirt is made over a decidedly flaring white taffeta drop skirt with three full ruffles at the foot. Three bands of lace are set into the skirt at about 12 inches apart coming to a decided point in the front. The waist, with its draped flachu effect and wide elbow sleeves, is a favorite style with Rue de la Paix modistes for this autumn and winter, and one that I predict will be extremely popular with American women for house and theatre wear.

A smart waist was a Forsythe model, worn with a skirt of the new earth brown, which was cut with a short train and elaborately stitched with a perfectly matched silk.

The separate blouse has an office not a whit less important than formerly. A glance in the shops, as well as at the best gowned women in Paris, tells this story. Not only as a morning outdoor garb, with the rough tweed "mannish" skirt, but with indoor long "swishy" skirts, it gives a woman a chance to look really smart, and yet be very plainly dressed.

For wearing with the two-piece tailor-made, waists of the French flannels, English wash flannels and Scotch tartans are most popular, while beau de crepe, heavy lace and silk ones will be in the lead with the elaborate coat and skirt suits for musicals, matinees and the like.

As to hats, velvet Gainsboroughs are having great vogue in Paris, both in black and colors to match gowns.

Sunflower Seed Oil.

In 1842 a Russian farmer conceived the idea of extracting oil from the sunflower. His schemes were considered most visionary, but he persevered, until now the industry is one of enormous proportions.
