

BERT RHODES SHOT

Bullet Enters Jaw Comes Out at Right Temple

A Portland Tough Does the Shooting and up to Date Has Not Been Caught

Bert Rhodes, a son of Mr. and Mrs. Allan Rhodes, of this city, and who has been for some years residing in Portland, where he worked as a bartender in the Horseshoe saloon corner of Third and Taylor streets, was shot through the head on Sunday night, by a stranger, and he is now lying at St. Vincent's hospital, Portland. The bullet entered near the left jaw, and came out through the right temple.

The physicians say that, though the wound is a fearful one, the man will get well, unless blood poisoning sets in.

The shooting occurred at 1 o'clock yesterday morning. Earlier in the evening two strangers, both intoxicated, came into the saloon, and raised a disturbance. A fight followed, and Rhodes, after knocking one of the strangers down, ordered both out of the house. A little later one of them returned, and offered his hand to Rhodes, and said, "Let us be friends." The men shook hands and had a drink when, as Rhodes temporarily turned his back, the stranger drew a gun and shot the bartender, and immediately ran away. The Oregonian this morning says of the case:

"Bert Rhoades, bartender at the Horseshoe saloon, who was shot through the head yesterday morning, is still alive, and the doctors say that he will recover in a short time if blood poisoning does not set in.

The detectives have learned that the man who fired the shot is Charles Jones, a stranger in the city, but until a late hour last night had found no trace of him. Detectives Simmons and Hartman are working on the case. "Rhoades' escape from instant death is considered by the doctors to be a miracle. The bullet followed the only course through his head that it could have taken without killing him at once. Several vital spots were grazed by the leaden missile in its course, and a variation of a fraction of an inch would have proved fatal to the victim."

Bert Rhoades is well-known here, where he grew up and followed the trade of painting and paper-hanging for years, until, on account of his weight, he had to abandon working on scaffolding. He has many friends in this city, who are grieved to hear of his serious condition.

Must Stand Their Trial

At 2 o'clock Monday afternoon United States Judge Bellinger overruled the demurrer to the charges against Marie Ware, Horace McKinley and Stephen A. D. Pater, accused of forgery and conspiracy in connection with certain land deals. The demurrers filed by Attorneys O'Day and Mays are based on the contention that the indictments are insufficient, in that they fail to mention the meridian in describing certain sections of land involved. The court held with United States District Attorney Hall that, inasmuch as the land filings were made in Oregon land offices, the Oregon meridian was meant.

The judges' displeasure arose from the fact that evidence given in the jury room had been disclosed and published in the papers, notwithstanding the oath of secrecy taken by both members and witnesses. He especially referred to the minute details of the voting, which were made public. Postmaster Fisher, is in the city. The aged man sobbingly protests his innocence. Dietrich is expected tomorrow.
