WALLA WALLA RIVER

Is the Freakiest Kind of a Freak Stream'

Gets a Divorce From Itself and Each Half Does Business by Itself

The contention over the division of the water of the Tum-a-lum and the Little Walla Walla rivers, and the formation of the first irrigation district in the state on the Little Walla Walla taken all together forms an interesting story.

In the first place, the Walla Walla river is a freak. Instead of being formed of two or more streams, the main river comes down from the Blue mountains in one stream until it reaches a point near Milton, when it abruptly divides into two streams—the Tum-a-lum, flowing westerly in a sweeping semi-circle with the convex curve to the north, and the Little Walla Walla, sweeping also westward, with its convex curve bending to the south, the area between the two streams forming an immense oblong circle of fertile soil, containing about $1,500,000 worth of property and peopled over by about 800 happy and prosperous people.

Converge Near the Columbia. After sweeping northward and southward for 10 or 12 miles, these two streams are attracted toward each other again, and after passing the state line, they unite again and go to the Columbia in union.

In 1872 Judge McArthur in a decision fixed the point of division for the two streams and decreed that each, the Tum-a-lum and the Little Walla Walla should be apportioned one-half of the natural flow of water coming down the main Walla Walla river, forever after.

Both branches of the river have been settled up, the streams have been diverted and one of the most prosperous communities in the West hugs the bottoms and tributary lands of these strangely separated rivers.

One of the old contentions of the people living on the Tum-a-lum has been that they were being deprived of a portion of their rightful share of the water by two mill races diverted from the Walla Walla before the river is divided to form its two branches below. These two races sweep out southward through Milton, around the point where the water is divided equally for the two streams, and then empty the undivided waters they carry into the Little Walla Walla, a mile and a half below where the Tum-a-lum and Little Walla Walla divide, thus giving the Little Walla Walla people the advantage of the Tum-a-lum people to the extent of the amount of water carried by these mill races.

However this inequality in the division of the water is offset in a peculiar way by nature.

Nature Tried to Strike a Balance. At a point about a mile and a half below the divergence of the two streams and below the outlet of the two mill races into the Little Walla Walla, an ancient channel diverges from the Little Walla Walla, and leads back through the tract enclosed between the two streams and carries the overflow waters from the Little Walla Walla back into the channel of the Tum-a-lum, thus effecting a just division of the water, after the mill races empty back into the Little Walla Walla that portion of the undivided water needed to turn the mill wheels.

The Milton, Freewater & Hudson Bay Ditch company has built a ditch diverting from the Little Walla Walla below where this old channel leads from that stream back to the Tum-a-lum and has filed a claim for 6000 miner's inches of water—an equal amount of this to be diverted from the Tum-a-lum and Little Walla Walla. The 3000 inches to be taken from the Tum-a-lum is to be diverted at the point of separation of the two streams, and carried down the natural channel of the Little Walla Walla to its head-gate, where, with 3000 inches from that stream it would be turned into the ditch and used to irrigate a large tract of land not sufficiently covered with ditches to produce crops.

As a basis for its claim for 6000 inches of water this ditch company claims that this amount of water is now going to waste in the two

FROM LAST TO FIRST

People used to take plain cod liver oil for coughs, colds, throat and lung troubles after other remedies had failed. Scott's Emulsion is the modern idea of cod liver oil—the first instead of the last resort when such ailments appear.

The taste of the oil is not apparent and the oil itself is partly digested—makes it easy for the stomach. Scott's Emulsion is a quick, reliable help at all ages.

streams and that it only claims unused water.

Scheme to Utilize Flood Water. The promoters of the ditch desire to use the overflow water of winter, when the streams are at their highest, for the purpose of winter irrigation. The summer flow of the stream is now entirely consumed in irrigating the present area under them and the new ditch company hopes to be able to produce crops with winter flooding.

The irrigation district of the Little Walla Walla was formed for the purpose of more equitably distributing the water of the stream and bringing about a system of irrigation government for those residing on those streams and there are prospects of the pending suit being amicably settled by mutual agreement among the irrigators involved.—East Oregonian.
