PATROL WAGON RUSHED

A crowd of nearly 500 people, in Portland, yesterday watched the patrol wagon, with gong madly clanging, career wildly around the corner, and dash up to the side entrance of the store of Olds, Wortman & King, the well-trained horses back the wagon to the curb, the blue-coated officers jump down and rush into the store, while the crowd, which was growing larger every minute, waited in breathless suspense for them to drag forth anything from a shop-lifter to a gory-handed murderer, but the look of expectation changed to disgust when the freight lift came popping up through its shaft in the side walk, loaded with empty packing cases, which the officers began loading into the wagon, while the crowd dispersed, gently requesting their friends to kick them, swearing that the next time they followed the wagon they would know it, a Salem man being one of the number. The secret of the whole proceeding was that the authorities at the police station needed some packing cases for something, and 'phoned to the store to see if they could have them, and when informed that they could, if they would send the wagon for them, they took the patrol, which was idle at that moment, but the driver of that dignified wagon objected to being converted into an expressman, and so endeavored to stir up a little excitement, with very satisfactory results.
