"TURN DOWN THE LIGHT."

Secretary Shaw got his training in strict economy in a country bank in Iowa, where every penny counts. Since he has been secretary of the federal treasury he has dealt with billions, but his early instincts are imperishable.

When he figured out the treasury accounts the other evening he found the deficit had reached $36,547,419.90.

"Turn down that light!" he commanded a careless clerk.

We may grow and be transplanted into new soil, but we never outgrow the fixed habits of earlier days. However great we may become, however large may be the affairs that devolve upon us, we unthinkingly, unconsciously fall back upon our true selves at every crisis.

Secretary Shaw has been severely criticised at times for a seeming disregard for law and precedent. He devised the plan for depositing government receipts from customs with national banks, when everybody supposed that congressional legislation, impossible to get, would be necessary, and he nearly took the congressmen's breath away by permitting banks to issue currency against all their government bonds, and, if they had not government bonds enough to substitute state and municipal bonds, or any other old security.

So it is seen that Secretary Shaw is a man of expedients and action. To such as he a treasury deficit of $36,000,000 and more has no terrors whatever.

He begins cutting down expenses by economizing on the light in the treasury building.

ASSAULT ON AN OLD SONG.

The legislature of New York is terribly wrought up over a proposed change in the good old voice-breaking battle song, "The Star Spangled Banner."

There has arisen in New York one who thinks he can improve upon Francis Scott Key's immortal work, by bringing it up to date and eliminating the spirit of hatred against the former foes across the Atlantic who have now become our very, very dear cousins.

The superintendent of the New York schools is the last one who has taken it upon himself to revise and edit American spirit. He has ordered out this verse in the text-book reprints. And where is that band who so vauntingly swore

That the havoc of war and the battle's confusion

A home and a country would leave us no more?

Their blood has washed out their foul footsteps' pollution. No refuge can save the hireling and slave

From the terrors of flight and the gloom of the grave.

He gives as his reason for the exclusion that these lines "bear irreverently on the British soldiery of the day," and he proposes to fill the hole in the old song with a composition of his own, which the state commissioners of education pronounce "drivel," and which others say "rattles like a tin pan full of nails."

Legislator Thompson, who is fathering the bill to prevent this mutilation of a lyric heirloom, calls the superintendent of schools "a resumption ass," and Thompson's frankness is worthy of emulation.

If the superintendent's argument is good, then we must re-edit with heavy expurgating hand all our priceless politico-literary treasures, beginning on the Declaration of Independence, which iconoclastic document in particular contains many very decidedly disrespectful references to our present dear cousins.

Whatever the New York legislature may do about it, the country at large does not want any amateur rhyme-maker monkeying with a bully old song that has become sanctified by time.

There can be no reasonable objection, however, to the New York superintendent composing an entirely new song, and submitting it to the public in competition. Thousands have done that, without shaking the earth from its foundations.

DOWN WITH THE ROLLER TOWEL.

When the Travelers' Protective Association of Iowa met recently, the members in good standing didn't waste any fleeting moments on pass legislation or trace suicide. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved, and then there was organized a crusade for liberty and freedom and better conditions that may go ringing down the channels of history or thereabouts.

Those drummers are going to fight the hotel roller towel with a boycott that has seven rows of teeth and means business.

That same towel is a wonder. Its natural setting is a hostelry where everybody calls the landlord "Bil." The girl who waits on the table has seen better days. If you look sympathetic she will tell you about it. The food is served in those little stone boats that weigh a pound each and the coffee is neither Mocha nor Java, but a liquid inspiration for crime. The hair brush is poverty stricken as to bristles, and there isn't any comb.

But the towel!

The young fellow who clerks in the One Price Clothing Store gets the first look at it and he is followed by the locomotive engineer who lays over at that town and eats at the hotel. He leaves his mark, all right, all right. A dozen more come in a hurry, and most of them sizzle a bit at the sink, take their turn at the towel, and hustle into the baggage room.

And along about the time when the ax is being applied to the dried apple pie, the member of the Travelers' Protective Association of Iowa who has been trying to sandbag a bill of goods into the store of the village grocer, arrives on the scene. He has the final wipe on the roller towel. It is wet and clammy and limp. It looks like a war map of Manchuria. A Sherlock Holmes could analyze it and name the vocation of every guest in the hotel. The drummer curses his luck and wonders why the board of health doesn't interfere.

And so the fight goes on.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portions of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by Catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

South Salem vs. Junction City.

The Stars of South Salem defeated the Junction City team Sunday by a score of 13 to 6. The Stars have only run against one snag this season, and that was Krebs Bros. team. Out of eleven games they have lost but two.

The line-up was as follows: Stars—G. Hoyt, 1f; R. West, 2b; E. Viesko, cf; B. Lyman, c; G. Keeton, p; M. Rasmussen, 1b; J. Humphrey, 3b; E. Arnold, ss; E. Dane, rf.

Junction City—Daly, 1f; Finley, 2b; L. Cummings, cf; L. Nered, c; Chase, p; Welch, 1b; F. Starr, 3b; E. Cleaver, ss; O. Finley, rf.

Struck out—By Keeton, 14; by Chase, 9; hits off Keeton, 2; off Chase, 12; hit by pitched balls—Dayton, Welch, Humphreys. Two-base hits—Cummings, Keeton. Three-base hits—Arnold.

It will splash and not rub off. This complexion all envy me. It's no secret, so I'll tell. Take thou Rocky Mountain Tea.

IMPOSING WEDDING CEREMONY

Berlin's Welcome to the Brides of Prussian Crown Princes

Friedrich Wilhelm, grandson to the great elector of Brandenburg, was the first Prussian crown prince to escort his bride into the Prussian capital. At the age of 19—as was then the custom—Friedrich Wilhelm was engaged to Princess Sophie Dorothea, daughter of King George I of England. On November 17, 1706, the princess and court commenced their journey from Hanover to Berlin. The royal train consisted of 40 coaches, 12 commissary or supply wagons, and 65 ordinary country wagons, requiring many relays and figuring a total of 879 horses. On November 29 the train arrived at Konigsberg, at that time the main entrance to Berlin. On November 30, 1706, the marriage ceremony was performed and followed by a celebration of the public, that lasted fully three weeks. Friedrich Wilhelm I, his title as the second Prussian king, reigned from 1713 to 1740.

Twenty years later, Princess Elisabeth Charlotte of Brunswick-Wolfenbittel was proclaimed, on June 12, 1733, at the historic castle of Salzdahlum, the fiancée of Crown Prince Friedrich. On June 24, the entire wedding party arrived at Potsdam, and on the 27th at 3 a. m. due to the great heat, the royal wedding procession, composed of 60 state carriages, moved from Charlottenburg to Berlin, passing through one continuous file of soldiers, who later on passed in grand review, before the royal party. King Frederick the Great, ruled from 1740 to 1786.

More than 60 years elapsed before Berlin again welcomes a crown princess and future queen. On December 22, 1793, Princess Louise of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, as the bride of Crown Prince Friedrich Wilhelm, nephew of Frederick the Great, and Princess Friederike, sister of Princess Louise and bridge of the brother of the crown prince, entered Berlin through the old Potsdamer Thor and there received at the hands of the mayor the address of welcome and witnesses the military and civil parade held in honor of the occasion. Queen Louise imbedded herself deeply into the hearts of her people. Her flight to Memel, her pleading with Napoleon, her early death shortly after a disastrous war with Napoleon, were the nucleus of the present German empire. Friedrich Wilhelm III ruled from 1797 to 1840.

Thirty years later, Berlin again received the fiancée of a Prussian crown prince. Friedrich Wilhelm III hesitated a long time before giving his consent to the marriage of the Crown Prince Friedrich Wilhelm to Princess Elisabeth of Bavaria, due to their religious differences, the princess being a Catholic, and the house of Hohenzollern protestant. No little excitement did it cause, when during the fall manoeuvre of 1823 the king announced the engagement of the crown prince and Princess Elisabeth of Bavaria. On November 27, 1823, the crown prince and the future queen of Prussia entered Berlin. Eighty years ago, in comparison with today, Berlin was a small city. The celebration and festivities partook the form of a huge affair.

Friedrich Wilhelm IV ruled from 1840 to 1860, when his brother Wilhelm I was appointed regent, two years later he died, and Wilhelm I became king and, in 1870-71, the first emperor of the German empire.

June 4, 1905, is the date set for the triumphant entry into Berlin of the Duchess Cecillie of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, as the bride of Germany's future emperor. The address of welcome at the Brandenburg Thor, the military and civil parade, the decorations of the city, and the festivities at the palace are to be carried out on a grand scale and will eclipse all previous events.

The kaiser and kaiserin will present the duchess with a magnificent court-train thirteen feet long and six feet wide, exquisitely embroidered in silver and pink velvet, the work of twenty needlewomen for three months. A curious wedding gift for the royal couple will come from the potters of Bunsloe and will consist of 120 articles, ranging from the simplest kitchen utensils to elaborate vases of the finest make.

WORKED IT SLICK

The most amusing insurance fraud on record is one of the oldest. It dates back to 1730 and thereabouts, when it was worked three times by a young woman with an extraordinary power of insulating death, and an elderly man who passed for her uncle. Twice, in different parts of England, she insured her life in her uncle's favor, went into convulsions and, to all appearances, died. The third time the game was played with an ingenious variation. The uncle went to a life insurance company, explained that he was in financial straits, and wished to borrow money on his niece's estate. To compensate for such a loan he would have to insure her life for its value, but could not afford to have this insurance become known, as it would expose his financial condition, and ruin his credit. The company therefore agreed to write the insurance under a bond of secrecy. As usual, the young woman went into convulsions and died. Before her funeral she lay in state for all the world to see Her uncle

Distress After Eating

Nausea between meals, belching, vomiting, flatulence, fits of nervous headache, pain in the stomach, are all symptoms of dyspepsia, and the longer it is neglected the harder it is to cure it.

Hood's Sarsaparilla and Pills

Radically and permanently cure it—strengthen and tone the stomach and other digestive organs for the natural performance of their functions.

Accept no substitute for Hood's. "I had dyspepsia twenty-five years and took different medicines but got no help until I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. Have taken four bottles of this medicine and can now eat almost anything, sleep well, have no cramps in my stomach, no burning and no distress." Mrs. WILLIAM G. BARRETT, 14 Olney St., Providence, R. I. Hood's Sarsaparilla promises to cure and keeps the promise.

"DO IT TO-DAY!"

"And to think that ten months ago I looked like this! I owe it to German Syrup."

The time-worn injunction, "Never put off 'til to-morrow what you can do to-day," is now generally presented in this form: "Do it to-day!" That is the terse advice we want to give you about that hacking cough or demoralizing cold with which you have been struggling for several days, perhaps weeks. Take some reliable remedy for it to-day—and let that remedy be Dr. Roschke's German Syrup, which has been in use for over thirty-five years. A few doses of it will undoubtedly relieve your cough or cold, and its continued use for a few days will cure you completely. No matter how deep-seated your cough, even if dread consumption has attacked your lungs, German Syrup will surely effect a cure—as it has done before in thousands of apparently hopeless cases of lung trouble.
