Governor of Vermont Grants Mrs. Rogers a Reprieve—Story of the Crime

Mrs. Mary Rogers, who was to have been hanged today, was at a late hour yesterday granted a reprieve, and her case will again go before the supreme court. The case has awakened more interest than any criminal case for many years, and there has been a tremendous pressure brought to bear on the governor of Vermont to gain this reprieve. Only two days ago Admiral Clark's brother telegraphed the governor that if the woman was hanged the picture of the "Captain of the Oregon" which hangs on the walls of the state capitol at Montpelier should be turned face to the wall for very shame. It was only at the last moment the governor consented to the reprieve. So much has been said of the case in the past few days that we give a short story of the crime for which she was charged, found guilty, and but for the reprieve granted last night, would now have paid the penalty.

Mrs. Rogers' crime was murder of her husband, Marcus Rogers, at Bennington, August 31, 1903. This was not the first attempt that had been made on the husband's life. Mrs. Rogers was married at the age of 10, and tired of her husband some three years after her marriage. At the time of the murder she was living apart from Rogers. For some little time her name had been connected with that of a man in Bennington. It was stated that she wanted to marry him, and brooded over the fact that her husband was the only bar to the marriage. She also wanted $500 insurance which Rogers carried.

On August 30, 1903, Mrs. Rogers, then living in Bennington, sent a note to her husband at Hoosick Falls, asking him to come to Bennington the next night as she wanted to see him. The following night about 9 o'clock Mrs. Rogers met her husband in the Bennington public square. The two walked up the road about a quarter of a mile to the banks of a little stream which flows through the town. When they arrived there they both sat down on the banks of the stream.

They had been there but a short time when Leon Perham, a young man with whose family Mrs. Rogers was boarding, came across the field with a rope in his hand. He was expected by Mrs. Rogers, and his coming was a part of a prearranged program. Young Perham had been there but a little while when Mrs. Rogers suggested a little game. She made a wager with Perham that he could not tie her hands so that she could not release them. Perham wound the rope about Mrs. Rogers' hands, but she slipped it off easily. Then she said to her husband, "See if you can do it, Mark." Rogers consented, and Perham wound the rope around Rogers' wrists. Mrs. Rogers whispered to Perham, "Tie him tight." As soon as the not was tied Rogers endeavored to slip it off, but without success. Finally Mrs. Rogers put her arms around his neck, drew his head down to her lap, and kissed him and whispered: "I know you couldn't get away."

She then drew from her waist a bottle of chloroform and spilling it on a handkerchief pressed it to her husband's face. In about five minutes the man was completely under the influence of the drug. Then Mrs. Rogers, calling to Perham to help her, took up the body and threw it into the brook. Before she went home she tried to effectually mask her part of the affair. She took a piece of paper and wrote a note, purporting to come from her husband, saying that he was tired of life and intended to commit suicide. Then she wound up the note in an ingenious way. "Don't blame my wife, Mary Rogers, for this, as she had nothing to do with it."

Mrs. Rogers signed her husband's name to the note, pinned it on his hat, and hung it on a tree. Then she and Perham went away. But at 6 o'clock the next morning Mrs. Rogers appeared at the police station, weeping and wailing, and begging that they send some officers with her to search for her husband. Inasmuch as most of the officers know Mrs. Rogers, and also knew that she had not been living with him, they wondered why she should be so solicitous at this time. But Mrs. Rogers begged for the aid of the police and finally several officers accompanied her in a search for the missing Rogers. Mrs. Rogers suggested that they look along the brook, because she thought it was a likely place for her husband to commit suicide. Hardly had the officers arrived at the brook than they found the body of Rogers. His hands were tied behind him just as Perham had tied him. When Mrs. Rogers saw the body she indulged in a passionate burst of grief.

The moment the officers saw the man's hands tied behind his back the whole plot stood revealed to them. Perham and Mrs. Rogers were quickly tried and convicted, the former being sentenced to life imprisonment, while Mrs. Rogers received the death sentence. After her conviction Mrs. Rogers also confessed to the murder of her baby. She picked it up by the heels and dashed its brains out against a stone wall, and then threw the body into an old well. When the body was found the woman said the baby fell into the well. In her confession made after she knew she must die on the gallows, the woman said she killed the baby because she was desperate, penniless, and the child was ill and had no medicine.

Strenuous efforts were made to save Mrs. Rogers from the gallows. An attempt was made to have the Vermont legislature pass a measure abolishing capital punishment, but the bill failed to pass.
