A STORY FROM THE FAR EAST

Dr. Johnson Writes Entertainingly of His Work in Far Away Korea

New York, July 5.—Dr. Woodbridge O. Johnson, a medical missionary in Korea, sends to friends here an interesting account of a trip into the country made by himself, an evangelistic helper, and the Rev. Addison Parker, of Richmond, Ind. Before they started there was much discussion as to how Mr. Parker should travel. It was too far to walk, and if he were to have a chair carried by coolies the natives would be shy, thinking him an official. Riding a pony was dangerous, as roads are bad and a fall always possible, but that mode was decided upon, Dr. Johnson providing a boys' saddle, and Mrs. Johnson a saddle blanket made from a red-fringed table cloth. Dr. Johnson says: "Mr. Parker took off his coat as soon as we left the city and rode in front, a picture I shall not soon forget. A stout man in shirt sleeves, almost as broad of beam as the pony was long, on a boy's saddle with stirrups almost touching the ground, a big white helmet above, a bright red table cloth below, a little Korean pony led by a bare headed, bare footed boy. It is worthy of note that everywhere along the road the man and the pony compared with the red fringe excited much admiration."

A stop was made for the night at a Buddhist monastery. "Buddhist temples in Korea," says Dr. Johnson, "are always delightfully located high up among the hills, surrounded by woods and by springs of pure water. They are open to all travellers or passers-by, and being almost always free from insects, in marked contrast to the wayside inns, their spare rooms are generally full. Four or five shaven monks met us at the gate, and with clasped hands bowed almost to the ground in welcome. We were escorted to a room where we had supper, eating the food we had brought with us. The priests supply travellers with rice and vegetables at a very moderate charge, and ask nothing for their rooms. We inquired when services were held. But once a day in the morning, we were told. How many priests connected with the monastery? Twenty-five, but only six now there. The rest were traveling and engaged in business at various market places. It is customary for priests to engage in business and many of them are away from their temples much. Except on special days, one in the spring and one in the fall, Buddhist monasteries are almost without worshippers, except near the capital, Seoul, where the King gives large donations to some of the temples, and I am told the worshippers are numerous."

Dr. Johnson is doing medical work in Korea under the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions. On this trip he went to market day in a town. There are no stores, and all business is transacted then. Dr. Johnson says: "We took our box of books and drugs, spread our straw mat, and soon had a curious crowd around. The case of instruments and the tooth forceps excited much comment. I invited all who had aching teeth to come forward and have them pulled without charge. Many responded, and the crowd, with jokes and laughter at the patients, got much fun out of it. I also saw a number of sick people, some of whom were there given medicine, and others, requiring operation or prolonged treatment, were directed to go to the dispensary at Taiku. The last patient I saw was a poor leper with face and hands thickly swollen and red. He had a front tooth which projected back so as to render it almost impossible for him to close his mouth firmly in eating. He implored me to pull it for him, which I did without touching him more than with three fingers on the temple. Some thought I was in danger of infection, but I washed in the sand of a neighboring stream. A foreigner is in more danger from malaria or typhoid than from leprosy. The latter is not particularly contagious here when ordinary precautions are taken."

Christian Endeavorers.

Baltimore, Md., July 5.—The Fifth regiment armory was crowded almost to suffocation this afternoon at the big welcome meeting that signaled the formal opening of the twenty-second international convention of the Society of Christian Endeavor. The welcoming hand for the churches and the local committee was extended by Rev. Oliver Huckel D. D. and Chairman Atwood, while Governor Warfield spoke for the state and Mayor Ti-mann for the city. Suitable responses were made by representative delegates, after which President Clark of Boston delivered a brief address. The initial session was brought to a close with the annual review of the field by General Secretary Von Ogden Vogt. This latter set forth that the growth of the society during the last year has kept pace with that of previous years. The number of young people's endeavor societies throughout the world now approaches 65,000, with an aggregate membership of 4,000,000, chiefly in the United States and Canada, and in Australia, Great Britain, China, India, Japan and in all missionary lands. It exists in about the same proportions in all the great evangelical denominations and in all their subdivisions.

Tonight, in the armory, there will be an international festival of praise with a chorus of 2500 voices led by Richard A. Harris and Rev. Carey Bonner of London, England.

The Art of Leading a Cow.

Leading a cow is a fine art. The editor knows because he tried it. He led a cow out to Dave Looney's Jersey ranch one hot day this week. She was a small, gentle, very ladylike cow—a princess of the royal blood of the New York Jersey herd book. So she was naturally inclined to lead beautifully. Wouldn't her royal highness be more comfortable if the hot halter was taken off, and she was not dragged ignominiously along at the tail end of a buggy? She nodded assent in her cow-like way, and she was free, and did go along chewing her cud of contentment. But the editor's troubles only began when three Jersey cattle appeared out of the brush, and a young gentleman Jersey, a mere cub of a spring calf, began to bellow in a mellow bull-tenor—his voice was just changing from a blat into a bellow—and her highness recognized his serenade and made for closer acquaintance. It was a mad chase, with the editor doing the cow-boy act without lariat or horse, and the hot sun playing bakeoven the whole length of his many forms. At last the princess got herself cornered on the outside of the fence of the Battle creek fill, and, all honor to Judge Scott, the fence would stop a cow. She was halted and led along beautifully again, and we thought we had solved the problem of leading a cow. Her lynch had become unadjusted, and we stopped to straighten it out, when she suddenly threw her head around and caught the editor on the jaw bone with one of her pretty little crumpled horns. The editor saw stars for a moment, while a surgical autopsy revealed a hole cut through his tongue, his lower lip and his upper lip began to assume African proportions, while the blood slowly oozed through the enlarged orifice in the front of his face. He mentally declared the stars he saw were not real stars, and the cow not a real cow, and suppressed the tendency to lay hands on a profane and inelegant vocabulary about leading cows for a living on a hot day. At last the 12 miles to the Looney ranch were covered. But pulling a lady cow up the Jackson hill on a hot day is not a picnic by any means—nothing like holding down a lady clerkship in the legislature. Moral: When flies are tormenting a powerful animal keep out of the reach of her horns.

MAKES WORK EASIER.

Salem People Are Pleased to Learn How It Is Done.

It's pretty hard to attend to duties with a constantly aching back; With annoying urinary disorders. Doan's Kidney Pills make work easier. They cure backache. They cure every kidney ill.

Mrs. Needham, wife of W. S. Needham, painter, residing at the corner of Fourth street and Jefferson avenue, North Salem, says: "Like almost all painters my husband has been troubled with his kidneys for years. The exposure, the reaching and stooping, combined with the turpentine and materials in the paint, all tending to put the kidneys out of order. His back often ached badly at night when he came home from work, and when he caught cold it always aggravated the trouble. He read an advertisement about Doan's Kidney Pills, and procured a box at Dr. Stone's drug store, and used them. They did good work by helping him at once, and he continued their use until relief was obtained."
