KANSAS LAUNCHED TODAY

If She is Like Her Namesake She Will Be the Freak of the Navy

Camden, N. J., Aug. 12.—The new United States battleship Kansas will be launched at the yards of the New York Shipbuilding Company this afternoon. Everything is ready for the event and it promises to be one of the most brilliant launchings ever witnessed in this city. Governor Hoch, of Kansas, Miss Anna Hoch, his youngest daughter, and his entire staff, as well as a large delegation of state officials and prominent citizens of the Sunflower state arrived here this morning by special train, to attend the launching of the new battleship. Miss Hoch will perform the ceremony of baptizing the big ironclad.

Nearly all the naval officers connected with the League Island Navy Yard and many of those connected with the navy department in Washington will attend the ceremony, and there will also be a large contingent of visitors from New York, Philadelphia and other cities on the Atlantic coast. Governor Hoch would have preferred the use of water for the christening of the new battleship, but the naval authorities demurred and the governor yielded the point. Miss Hoch will follow the precedent by breaking a bottle of champagne against the bow of the ship at the moment when it slides into the water.

The keel of the Kansas was laid in February, 1904. The Kansas is a sister ship to the Vermont, now building at Quincy, Mass., and will have the same armament as the Minnesota, launched at Newport News a few months ago and as the Connecticut. The measurements of the new battleship are as follows: Length over all, 456 feet 4 inches; length between perpendiculars, 450 feet; extreme beam to moulding, 76 feet 5 1/2 inches; extreme beam to outside of armor, 76 feet 10 inches. Trial displacement, 16,000 tons. The warship will be heavily armored, and her battery will be formidable, the main one consisting of four twelve-inch, eight eight-inch and twelve seven-inch guns, while the secondary battery will be twenty three-inch, twelve three pounders, semi-automatics; six one-pounder automatics, two machine guns of thirty caliber and six automatic guns of thirty caliber. She will be fitted with twin screws and will be required to steam eighteen knots an hour. She will have accommodations for 800 officers and men.

The Almighty Dollar.

"And here for the first time let us consider our alleged pursuit and worship of the 'almighty dollar.'" This American characteristic is hardly a quality; it is rather regarded as a national failing, the result of a narrowness of vision, of a wrong estimate of values.

"But foreigners who come to our land and learn life under American conditions become naturalized in this respect quicker than in any other. They see for themselves exactly what the American has seen, and they learn that the 'almighty dollar' in America deserves its adjective. In their own land money gives them certain powers, but these powers are strictly limited by customs, institutions and conventions. The ruble, the franc, the pound sterling, can buy much, it is true; but there are locks a money keg will not open. In America the dollar opens all doors, provided a man be what he should be. But abroad even this proviso will not give foreign money the power of an American dollar. In our own land time and money will enable a man to become whatever any American may become. He or his descendants may be made the equals of any other.

"It is this knowledge that gives the value to American money. To an American the dollar is not only a proof of achievement, but it is the assurance of opportunity. With it he can buy freedom, education, independence. Whatever he may be, his children have the whole future in which to develop. 'Money is worth only what it will buy; and in America money renders every career possible. This the immigrant learns, and straightway he becomes rich, that he may become ambitious.

"Thus the American love of money is rooted in a good motive, it rarely grows into miserliness. We fight for money, and then part with it for whatever is better worth having."—Tudor Jinks in Outlook.

WOMANS REALM INVADED

Bad Burglars Steal Trousers and then go Trohugh the Pockets

Fall River, Mass., has been worked by the midnight marauder and worked to a finish. Indeed things have reached such a pass that no man's pants are safe when once removed from the wearer's anatomy. Burglars have bargled, and finding no silverware or other valuables have toted off the bifurcated unmentionables of the head of the house, and gone through the pocket thereof invading what here in Salem is considered the sacred and immemorial privilege and right of the respective little women who have benevolently assimilated and annexed us. It is stated by one paper that one burglar swiped every pair of trousers in the house, and the owner a business man, being compelled to get down early, had to wear his better half's kimono and another had to remain in the house until garments could be sent him from the store.

Fall River got desperate and appealed to the police with the usual result and then Fall River got together and showed that though it had lost its by coverings it had not lost its sense of humor, by passing the following resolutions:

"Whereas, we have long suffered in silence from the touch of a vanished hand and have found ourselves forced to walk down town through lack of money enough for car fare, be it

Resolved, That we do not believe the police in our district would be able to catch the yellow fever if they were living in New Orleans, and

Resolved, That we hereby agree to wear our trousers to bed for the next 30 days in the hope of being robbed by nobody of more distant kin than our wives, and

Resolved, That in case we go home broke after a day at the races, the bucket shop or the poker table we will hang our trousers on a hook outside the window of our respective chambers in order that the robber may be spared useless labor and to save wear and tear on the window screens and on our nerves, and be it

Resolved, That, police protection being a dream, we hereby assess ourselves half a dollar each for fly paper, to be placed outside the window in the hope of catching the thief through close contact, and be it further and finally

Resolved, That a thief who is mean enough to rob a Fall River man after everybody else, from the Equitable Life and the cotton market down to the Davis mill and the meat trust, has been doing the same job for 12 months, should be lynched at sight, and we hereby affix our signatures to an agreement to pull on the rope as soon as the miserable miscreant is caught.

REV. SWACKHANNER IN JAIL.

Colored Preacher Well Known in Lane County Bobs Up Again.

Rev. Swackhanner, the colored preacher, who held several meetings in Lane county two or three years ago, gets his name in the papers quite regularly. The following is from the Spokane Chronicle:

Evangelist David John Henry Allen Swackhanner, late of Shoshone, Idaho, and formerly of Hayti, the wandering colored preacher who visited Spokane not long ago, spent two nights of last week in the city bastille of Butte because the police of Butte could not tell the difference between a vag and a preacher of the Swackhanner type. A dark night, some box cars, the railroad yards and a freight train also contributed to the unfortunate predicament that the evangelist found himself in.

It was about 1 o'clock in the morning, and the Rev. Swackhanner was engaged in the quest for a goodly boxcar to conceal his person in, says the News. About the same time a vigilant policeman spotted the sky pilot and arrested him. The evangelist was conveyed to Chief Mulholland's bastille, and there languished.

Had and weary the gospel shark from Hayti emerged into freedom. "I had missed the passenger train," said the Rev. Swackhanner, "and, not wishing to lose time, I was going to take a freight. A policeman just swallowed me up and took me to jail. They kept me there until this morning. There was no sugar in my coffee, no sugar in my tea. I had no cot nor blanket, and not even a chair to sit down on."

men and the Pure Food Question. Opening a series of articles on "Safe Foods and How to Get Them," in the September Delineator, Mary Hinman issues a call to women to unite in the study of the food question that they may use their influence intelligently to remedy the existing evils. Amid all the talk of food adulteration," writes Mrs. Abel, there is one note: the buyer must be educated. In this matter of food the woman at the end of the line, for it is the daily group that consumes the bulk of the food. The function of buying, come, indeed, to be her chief economic function. "On the other hand, ignorance of the buyer as to food is very great, and especially such foods have been changed by recent methods of manufacture. It seems to be much of a strain on the average to learn, for instance, that there are now three kinds of vinegar made, consequently all are sold to us under one familiar name, cider vinegar. Then, people do not seem to know that bright vegetable colors are destroyed by heat, and demand that preserved strawberry should be the canned pea green, by what means it may be obtained. A reliable cannery is said to be added for the first time red coloring material to the tomatoes because the demand is for a very red tomato. It is possible to be as ignorant as was a woman who wanted the new pack of tomatoes in April. I am told that the label 'warranted to keep any length of time in any climate' does not arouse the suspicions of those who stoutly insist on 'no preservatives.' And those of us who are not ignorant have given up in the most ignominious way and expect to be cheated. "Now consider the difference it would soon make in any community if a small number of householders began to study the question of the food supply. They would necessarily impart to their neighbors their new-found knowledge; the dealers would soon know that a spirit of inquiry was abroad, and the best of them would welcome it. When the officials and the physicians of the town began to co-operate, everyone would know that the movement had the advice of those who at least ought to be competent to guide it. There is valuable experience to be gained in improving local ordinance, experience greatly needed to make our recommendations as to state and national legislation of any weight."
