FIRE IS UNDER CONTROL

Bad Blaze Starts Near Detroit and Does Immense Amount of Damage

The forest fire which has been burning in the Cascade mountains above Detroit on the eastern line of the Corvallis & Eastern railroad, and which for many days threatened to become the most destructive blaze that has visited the Santiam country in years, is now under control, and it is believed will be extinguished without extensive further damage.

About a week ago the fire began near the logging camp of the Curtis Lumber Company, northeast of Detroit. The origin of the fire is said to have been a spark from a passing engine on the railroad. The fire seemed of small importance, and did not command much attention from lumbermen until last Friday, when a rising wind fanned the slow blaze into billows of fire that swept over the green mountainside at racehorse speed. The south side of the great ridge of mountains northeast of Detroit was soon ablaze, the flames leaping from tree to tree in the green timber, and razing to the ground some of the valuable lumbering material of the section.

Within a half mile of Detroit the flames crept through a district that had been slashed for homesteads, and two mountain homes were destroyed. Mountain trails that connect mines along the Humburg with the outside world were rendered impassable for several days.

All people in the neighborhood turned out to fight the fire, the work of stemming the tide of destruction being directed by the forest rangers, headed by the superintendent of the district. Men are yet at work fighting the fire, and will be kept busy patrolling the burned district for many days.

A west wind carried the flames east from the Breitenbush river over several miles of the most valuable timber in the mountains. The burned property belonged to the Curtis Lumber Company, and one or two Eastern corporations, and a large tract in the government reserve. While the loss cannot be accurately given, it is estimated to have run into the thousands of dollars already, and if a brisk wind should again fan the flames to life and the fire should be carried across the divide in the reserve, the loss would be immense.

KILLED AT BONNEVILLE

Bonneville, Or., Aug. 18.—While answering his aged mother's call to come home, J. L. Anderson, of 444 North Prospect street, Kansas City, Mo., was foully murdered near this place some time early Wednesday morning. The crime is remarkable for its cold-bloodedness and its mystifying features.

The body was found by O. A. Townsend, of Portland, at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, at a point 600 feet west of the Bonneville station and about 75 feet from the O. R. & N. track. Telegraphic advices brought Coroner Finley and Sheriff Word to the scene of the crime. The investigation showed that Anderson met his death by repeated blows on the skull with a heavy bridge bolt, but failed to reveal the slightest clue to the murderer or to disclose a motive for the crime.

The body was found in the open in a slight depression, the battered head lying in a pool of blood, while near by lay the blood-clotted bar of iron with which the crime had been committed. A peculiar feature was the orderly condition of the body, and that the ground showed no sign of any struggle. The corpse lay stretched at full length, the feet together, and the hands almost clasped across the breast.

Assailant Crept From Behind.
Every evidence indicated that the murdered man had been seated while his assailant crept up and struck him from behind. The skull was crushed apparently at the first blow. The fact that the motive for the crime was one other than robbery was evidenced by the condition of the clothing. No attempt, apparently, had been made to rifle the pockets, which contained various papers and $2 in money.

Papers found on the body show it to be that of J. L. Anderson, of Kansas City, Mo. He appeared to be about 22 years of age, although, with the signs of having been tramping, was neatly dressed. A registered letter from his mother in Kansas City bore the marks of having been delivered to him at 249 Burnside street, Portland, Or., August 13th.

May Work Better Than Parasites.

The Electrical Magazine, according to German papers, describes a series of experiments for destroying insects injurious to the products of the soil, which experiments are said to have been successful. An engineer at Monaco was the first one to have his attention called to it while he worked with an electric machine in the open air. He observed that metal rods, which were put into the ground and were then connected with a dynamo of 110 volts, made insects in the vicinity leave their hiding places in the ground. He argued that electricity might therefore be used on a large scale to kill these insects, which all come in great haste to the surface. It is probable that for the killing of various kinds a different voltage should be used. Further experiments must be made. Further experiments must be made to this end.

An apparatus is mentioned, invented by a Russian, for killing injurious insects by electricity. A dynamo is so placed upon a hand car that no electricity is engendered while the car is standing still.

When in motion the current passes into the ground through the iron wheels of the car upon one side, and upon the other through the points of brushes of copper wire, which are fastened in the rear of the car so as to be a few inches above the ground.

The result is said to be that all insects in the vicinity of the copper brushes are killed as if by lightning.

Gracie Read His Letters.

Down at Oregon City yesterday E. Gracie Hanson sued H. C. Hansoe asking that the marriage tie between them be dissolved. The wife charges that Hanson already had one wife living when he married her, and that she is, so to speak, only a wife by brevet. The lady asserts that "letters received by her husband disclosed the fact of the previous marriage," and as he would, no doubt, refrain from handing the letters over to her, it is fair to presume that Gracie took advantage of her wifely privileges and read hubby's letters. Which goes to show that when you are looking for trouble, you can generally find it.
