

Ladies Swell Suits

Every garment we offer is a specially good, stylish leader. Very few of each individual pattern and design. And above all else these garments fit the wearer as they should, for they are made by men who know how to tailor to the queen's taste. Every little detail is carefully worked out. The best material and most effective trimmings are used all the way through. No shoddy, half-sewed stuff. Each individual garment stands on its own merit as a finished, tailored piece of stylish work.

WILLAMETTE DEFEATS MULTNOMAH

Only Oregon Team That Lowered Their Colors—Portland's Third Defeat in Sixteen Years

A clever pass by Nelson, a pretty place by Nace, a straight kick by Rader, and Willamette was the first Northwest college that ever met and defeated the mighty Multnomah. It was a great contest, and a fierce one; but consistent training and college spirit overcame the almost overwhelming odds of weight and experience.

The club team was composed of star men who have won fame on many a field, and they played with a desperation that only comes to those not accustomed to the sting of defeat. Coach Bishop took to Portland a bunch of players who are fast becoming stars, who understand the game, who have been training faithfully, and who play as only men can who are defending their honor their alma mater. The result was a victory for Willamette by a score of four to nothing.

It was one of the best and one of the most hotly contested games ever played on Multnomah field; and that is saying much, for it is doubtful if any field west of the Mississippi has been the scene of any more Titanic struggles than has the Portland gridiron. It was truly a great game, and the dense crowds on the sidelines and in the grand stand arose en masse to cheer a well earned victory.

When Rader Kicked the Goal.

The Salem boys, by playing a clean straight game, completely won the hearts of the Portlanders and supporters of Willamette on the sidelines outnumbered the club supporters ten to one. The cardinal and gold were everywhere in evidence and a large section of the grandstand was occupied by members of the young people's society of the Sunnyside Methodist church, who carried pennants and colors and joined in the Willamette yells and songs with as much vim and enthusiasm as any student of the old school.

The reports that have been circulated in the papers that Multnomah was woefully weak this year may have been true when they were started, but they are far from true now. Such men as Overfield, Saunders, McMillan, Horan, Jordan, Woodruff, Blanchard and James are not to be found on every team. Indeed it is doubtful if any team in the country can boast of so many stars. But they lack team work and speed, both of which can only be acquired through training, and this the club men have not had.

The brilliant features of the game were the running in of a punt by Nace for 50 yards, another run through the line of 20 yards by the same individual, and the magnificent punting of Coleman. It was in punting and the handling of punts that the Salem men clearly outclassed the Portland players and as it was their deficiency in this line that lost them the game last year (coupled with a Multnomah referee) so it was their excellence in that, this year, which enabled them to gain the victory.

Every man on the college team was in the game all the time, and in every play at the right time. Marker, the lightest guard in Oregon, was pitted against the mighty Saunders, and though the club men concentrated all their strength on him, and made most of their gains through that part of the line, they were neither very great nor very consistent, and when the big Indian was taken back of the line, they ceased almost altogether. Philbrook played a good defensive game and did his share of advancing the ball when given a chance to tuck it under his arm. Keller and Pollard played their usual star ball, while the work of Coleman, Patton and Henkle, on the ends, was far from "weak." It was magnificent. Multnomah tried to get around, or by, those weak (f) ends on various occasions, but not once did she make her yardage in that manner. In the back field, while Nace made the only sensational runs of the day, he did not make yardage as constantly as Rader and Long. The work of all three men on defense was equally as good as their offense, while Henkle, who played defensive half, played even a better game there than at end. He and Nelson, the little center, were the only ones who succeeded in breaking through that powerful line and downing the man with the ball for a loss. Nelson is without doubt the best center in the Northwest, for his size, if not regardless of size. In Saturday's game he was pitted against a man many pounds his superior in weight, yet he played him to a standstill. Patton at quarter and defensive end played the same consistent game that he always does.

For Multnomah, Coach Overfield, who was given a place on the "All American" team, Horan, James, Saunders and McMillan played the best game.

While the Willamette goal was never in any serious danger, the collegians were within striking distance of the club men's goal line three different times, and the last half was played almost altogether in Multnomah territory.

Manager Savage and Coach Bishop displayed poor judgment in ever consenting to allow Lonergan, of the Multnomah club, to referee. By so doing they caused the Willamette team to lose at least 15 or 20 yards on undeserved penalizations, while permitting the club men to raise a discussion after nearly every down, and otherwise cause delay, which enabled them to get the necessary breath. While the score might not have been larger with a square official, the chances for it's being so would have been unquestionably better. The allowing of Lonergan to officiate was unnecessary and inexcusable. The chances taken were desperate and the Salem team is lucky to get off as well as it did.

The large crowd was enthusiastic, even when the gathering darkness made it almost impossible to follow the plays. The Willamette rooters who went down Saturday morning 150 strong were more than jubilant over the result, and as they went pouring out of the gates onto Morrison street, were singing:

"Palms of victory, palms of glory,
Palms of victory we have won."

The trip from Portland to Salem was one continuous celebration in which every song and cheer ever heard of was given, and scored.

The students and the people of Salem are proud of the victory, and justly so, for the Willamette players are not only the first Northwest collegians to beat Multnomah, but, as the Oregonian says, they played good football, and they have the distinctive glory of having first administered to the club men their first defeat since Reliance beat them 6 to 0 in 1902, and the second defeat since California played them off their feet Christmas day, 1889.

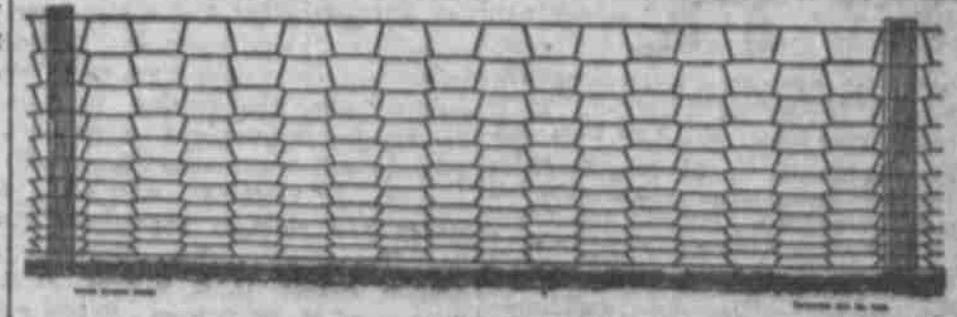

That Willamette deserved to win was the unanimous opinion of the crowd on the side lines and also the opinion of Multnomah's coach, P. D. Overfield, who made the following statement:

"The 'spoils belong to the victor,' and to Willamette university is due the victory in yesterday's game. The collegians played a clean, strong, aggressive game, and endurance, the result of systematic training, had much to do with the result of the contest. They also showed the result of Coach Bishop's efforts, and no player was seen staggering along with the ball unaided. United effort, i. e., team work, was apparent at all times. The game was particularly clean, and in few instances deserves criticism. The officials were evidently conscientious in their endeavors to give their best efforts to their work, and at times they were put under very trying circumstances. The marring features of the game was the inability of the club team to punt during the second half, and resulted disastrously, to say the least. The loss of Keller at center and James at fullback greatly weakened the offensive work of the team. One of the most noteworthy acts I have ever seen was that displayed by Dr. Wiley G. Woodruff at the end of the first half, when he said: "If you need me, I'll go in." That sort of a spirit is one to be admired by everyone, and which, if shown by all candidates who are members of the club, will mean a much stronger and better-trained team before the season closes. The work of McMillan Horan and Blanchard, considering the amount of training and practice of signals, was indeed wonderful. Outside of the weakness of punting I am perfectly satisfied with the work of the team, and think it was all, if not more, than could be expected under actual conditions. The game is an evidence of the necessity of training and actual practice on the

THIS IS Keystone Fencing

It is made of number 12 wire throughout, double cable, top and bottom, and the stays are continuous, winding from top to bottom and vice versa, interweaving with each main wire at every joint, so that there is absolutely no slip. The nature of the weave is such that the fence retains its tension through heat and cold and does not sag.

This Is the Joint

You'll notice there's no slip to that. We have this in all heights, and also have the Peoria in same weave, number 13 wire, at a less price. We have sold a lot of this fencing the past year, and it is giving the best of satisfaction. Call and inspect.
