Considering Railroad Rates Question

Washington, D. C., Nov. 21.—The senate committee on interstate commerce met here today in compliance with a call issued by Senator Elkins, the chairman of the committee, to consider the question of railroad rates legislation, which will come up in the coming session of congress. Ever since the hearing on the subject closed, the committee has had two experts and a number of clerks employed, compiling information for the use of the committee and the senate. They have collected a large mass of data and will have it in shape available for the committee's benefit. The committee will take up the entire subject as if no bill had been considered heretofore, but it is expected the chairman will be prepared to present a measure of his own as a basis for discussion. Senator Foraker also has a bill which will receive consideration. It is expected that the committee will continue its work until the opening of congress on December 4, and it is by no means probable that it will have finished its work by that time.

The committee is divided in two factions. Senators Cullom, Dooliver and Clapp are strongly advocating the passage of a measure incorporating the views of President Roosevelt on the subject of railroad rates legislation, while the opposition includes Senators Aldrich, Foraker, Kern, Millard and Chairman Elkins. There is practically no hope that the two factions will be able to agree on any measure and it is almost certain that at least two reports will be submitted, a majority and a minority report, with possibly individual reports by one or two members who hold particular views on the subject and cannot agree with their other colleagues.

What the senate is going to do in the matter is a matter of speculation among the members. It is understood that some of the eastern and southern railroads have in some way signified their intention of supporting President Roosevelt's policy and the opposition is considerably worked up over the rumor that other important lines are about to give up the fight and line up with the supporters of the President's policy.

Chairman Elkins has been counting senatorial noses just as anxiously as the President and his friends have been doing. The southern tour of the President, it is claimed, won over two votes, those of the Louisiana senators. It is also reckoned that, as the senate stands today, there is a majority for some kind of conservative bill such as Elkins, Aldrich, Foraker and Millard can agree upon. The fight is exceedingly bitter, although entirely under the surface. It may soon develop into an open struggle between big trunk lines arrayed in opposition to each other. It is charged that the Seaboard line, between Norfolk and New York, are, in the main, more concerned about their community of interests than in laws that will reach tariffs for long freight hauls. The men lined up with the Elkins contingent say that any community of interests between the roads will not be disturbed by administration forces, if the kind of rate measure which the administration approves the plain sailing. However much or little there may be in such charges they are being driven home with all emphasis possible. Nothing has disturbed the Elkins people so much lately as the speech of Senator Knox in Pittsburg. They had hoped till the last moment that the senator was on their side, but now they fear that his attitude is the attitude of more senators who have not yet come into the open.
