The amount of taxes, interest to date of sale and penalties due upon each parcel is set opposite the description of the same, and also the name of the person to whom such parcel is taxed, which is also the name of the owner when known. The sale will be held at the sheriff's office in the court house in Salem, Marion county, Oregon, in manner and form as upon sale of real property under execution.
Each parcel will be sold to the person who offers to pay the taxes, costs, and accruing penalties thereon, and take a certificate at the lowest rate of interest, provided the maximum rate shall not exceed 10 per cent per annum. The sale will be made subject to redemption as provided by law.
W. J. CULVER,
Sheriff and Tax Collector of Marion county, Oregon.
A KANSAS TRAVELER.
A Recent Trotter Through That Vale of Fever 'n Ager Gets Some Surprising Information.
Smith would hardly be called much of a traveler in these globe-trotting days, for 400 miles from St. Louis is the extreme limit of his wanderings, and he never departs far from the regular beaten routes. But he has a way of seeing things that other people would overlook, a sort of digging out big facts from under smaller indications; and what he sees he remembers and can tell about. A little while back business took him down the Iron Mountain railroad and held him at Newport over Sunday, and instead of leaving around the hotel office, as a respectable traveling man is supposed to do, especially in Arkansas, he caught a morning train for a short run further down the road, and then took to the woods. Smith said it was just six jumps from the depot to tall timber, but this is probably incorrect. During the long years when all Iron Mountain locomotives were wood burners the belt of the big timber was cut within "toting" distance of the track. Besides, there is an indentation to clear, and cultivate the adjacent land, since the railroad company builds one string of fence. But it is best to let Smith tell the story in his own way.
"I offered a boy 50 cents to walk around with me and show me the country, but his father volunteered in his place, with the stipulation that I shouldn't let it be known that he had worked on the Sabbath. Mind you, this was in Arkansas—pronounced like the last letter was a 'w.' I had half expected to find it a lawless wilderness, but they have legislation there to keep a man in the straight and narrow path, and the statutes are all enforced. I told the old man I would give him a quarter more if he would talk steadily all the time we were out, which was the same as throwing good money away, for he would have knocked 50 per cent off the first mentioned figure for just that privilege. He liked to talk, and he knew how. Stop the first forty men passing the corner of Broadway and Olive streets, and the chances are that not one of the gang could match him with general information and good, hard sense. An smart enough along a few special lines—farm and forest products have brought me the biggest part of my present bank account—but he could teach me tricks in my own trade and then branch off to forty; other subjects given facts and figures that would convince a deaf and dumb man.
"I ate dinner at his home on the bank of White river. There was neither silver, china nor glassware on the table, but the tin plates and cups had been washed in hot soap and thoroughly cleaned, for that was my own part of the job. There was only one room in the house, about 12 feet wide one way, but the limit was off as to length. You see, the front wall was lacking, and if the occupant felt crowded at any time he had the circumference of the earth to spread over. There are plenty of big farmhouses down that way but it struck me that they suffered in comparison in point of floor space. We had two kinds of meat and three of fish, all procured free of cost within shouting distance of where we enjoyed them; butter and milk from a cow that never cost her owner a cent for grain or pasture; in fact, the only expensive luxury on the table was corn bread. My host said that corn cost him 65 cents a bushel and was rarely cheaper in that country, though the average land in that vicinity would yield 30 or 40 bushels to the acre. The same land would, one year with another, make from three-fourths to a bale of cotton. Take it as it runs, in its wild state, this land could be had for from $2.50 to $7 an acre, and would cost $10 more for clearing and fencing. Just think how far $17 would go in a real estate deal over in the American bottoms, or anywhere between here and Chicago! He "reckoned" the timber on the land would pretty near pay for it, but if I am any hand at figuring "stumpage" the cut on one acre would pay for ten. Oaks 4 feet through, you know; gums that run 60 feet to the first limb, and all that sort of thing.

"See that white snag over yonder in the water?" asked the old man. "I pulled 160 acres of good land out of the river right there one morning last June. It was in a mussel shell, and some of these days I aim to cut open another one and dig out a sawmill. Pearl hunter? Yes, when the water is low enough; at other times I fish and trap. Never did take to work—for myself—but just let me get a little capital ahead and I'll hire a crew of niggers and branch out into farming and saw-milling. The whole blamed country has got to be developed. There are lots of folks through this section just getting rich in spite of themselves. They don't know that they've got the whole world skinned to a finish for readymade opportunities, but it's a fact all the same. The money it will take to fit a man out for renting in Illinois will buy 160 acres of good land here and the stock and tools to work it. Turn an old sow out in the woods and mark the increase once a year, so you'll have no trouble with your neighbors about ownership, and it won't be long till you're shipping car loads of fat hogs that never cost you an ear of corn. Same way with cattle and horse stock, but the most money is in young mules. Round 'em up out of the cane when they're 2-year-olds and sell 'em as fast as you please for $125 apiece. Them are the old Arkansaw ways of getting rich. I've got plans of my own."
"And so had I before we got back to the station. They gave me a good bed at Newport that night, but I couldn't sleep for planning. Some of these days that old fellow is going to be surprised with a partnership proposition. Yes, he's lazy, all right; but the smartest men we've got right here in St. Louis are the ones that long ago decided to make a living without shedding their coats. They are getting paid for what they know and the things they can make other folks do by keeping right after them. Executive ability is the one thing that capital must control in advance, or promoting would go out of fashion. If I want to spoil a good pearl hunter to make a poor resident superintendent, that's my business, and his. I can't do worse than drop a few thousand dollars, and in fact case I won't work for a new start in St. Louis—not while I've got the price of a ticket to Arkansas."—Globe Democrat.

GARRISON'S SALUTORY IN LIBERATOR.
It is nearly seventy-five years since William Lloyd Garrison began the publication of the Liberator in this city. This was his salutatory in the first issue of the Liberator:
In the month of August I issued proposals for publishing the Liberator in Washington city, but the enterprise, though hailed in different sections of the country was palsied by public indifference. Since that time the removal of the Genius of Universal Emancipation to the seat of government has rendered less imperious the establishment of a similar periodical in that quarter.
During my recent tour for the purpose of exciting the minds of the people by a series of discourses on the subject of slavery, every place that I visited gave fresh evidence of the fact that a greater revolution in public sentiment was to be effected in the free states—and particularly in New England—than at the south. I found contempt more bitter, opposition more active, retraction more relentless, prejudice more stubborn, and apathy more frozen than among slave owners themselves. Of course, there were individual exceptions to the contrary. This state of things afflicted, but did not dishearten me. I determined, at every hazard, to lift up the the standard of emancipation in the eyes of the nation, within sight of Bunker Hill and in the birthplace of liberty. That standard is now unfurled; and long may it most unhurt by the spoiliations of time or the missiles of a desperate foe—yes, till every chain be broken and every bondman set free. Let southern oppressors tremble—let their northern apologists tremble—let all the enemies of the persecuted blacks tremble.
I deem the publication of my original prospectus unnecessary, as it has obtained a wide circulation. The principles therein inculcated will be steadily pursued in this paper, excepting that I shall not array myself as the political partisan of any man. In defining the great cause of human rights I wish to derive the assistance of all religions and of all parties.
Assenting to the "self-evident truth" maintained in the American Declaration of Independence, "that all men are created equal, and endowed by their creator with certain inalienable rights—among which are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," I shall strenuously contend for the immediate enfranchisement of our slave population. In Park street church, on the Fourth of July, 1829, in an address on slavery, I unreflectingly assented to the popular but pernicious doctrine of gradual abolition. I seize this opportunity to make a full and unequivocal recantation, and thus publicly ask pardon of God, of my country and of my brethren, the poor slaves, for having uttered a sentiment so full of tergiversity, injustice and absurdity. A similar recantation from my pen was published in the Genius of Universal Emancipation at Baltimore, 1829. My conscience is now satisfied.
I am aware that many object to the severity of my language; but is there harsh as truth and as uncompromising as justice. On this subject I do not wish to think, or speak, or write with moderation. No! No! Tell a man whose house is on fire to give a molerate alarm; tell him to rescue his wife from the hands of a ravisher; tell the mother to seek rescue her babe from the hands of which it has fallen—but urge me to use moderation in a cause like the present. I am in earnest—I will not cease—I will not relax—I will treat a single inch—and I will hear! The apathy of the people is pestilential, and to hasten the refection of the dead.

It is pretended that I am the cause of emancipation and citizenship of my measures. This is not true. On this question, I am humble as it is, in fact, a moment to a considerable extent shall be felt in coming years—necessarily, but beneficially—my course but as a blessing, and will bear testimony that I will desire to thank God that I am to be disregarded. The fact which bringeth a snare," and His truth in its simplicity. And here I close with this fraternal:
A Dedication.
Oppression! I have seen thee face,
And met thy cruel eye and brow;
But the soul-withering glance not now—
For dread to proffer feelings place
Of deep abhorrence! Scorning grace
Of slavish knees that at thy stool bow
I also kneel—but with far other base;
Do hail thee and thy herd of slaves,
I swear, while lifeblood warms throbbing veins,
Still to oppose and threaten heart and hand,
Thy brutalizing sway—till chains
Are burst and freedom raised and Tamping oppression and his in such is the vow I take—as God!
Boston, January 1, 1831.
KNOWLEDGE IS (WIND)
"As the fellow said, knowledge is power," I ventured to remark.
"Wind power," said the kind of mad. "That's one thing I found out while I was in it. Look at me—no one studied all my life and learns everything, yettin' old and I do most any time, and all I'll hind is my wife, a clerkin' and pa's ride. The facts I've got won't be of any use to me. Why, if I started to give 'em she just wouldn't listen."
"You mowt write 'em down," I says.
"At that old Fottiber I ought to die. Write 'em down!" says he when he could audible. "Don't you understand if I tried to write down all I'd have to live over a bunch to finish up?"
"Well, since it won't do good," I asks, "why are you so about how far you are from cloud?"
"Peter, he smoked quiet in studied. Then, after a bit, he says he. "Knowin' is a habit man has brains the more he them the more they learn; other day I seen in the country the figgers tellin' how far we was the sun. It didn't say how found out, but I judge it took of studyin' and squintin' and calculatin'." What good do us to know how many miles it is sun if we ain't intendin' to sun it? Not a bit; yet it's a nice know."
"Which goes to prove," that knowledge is a luxury, necessity."
"So the most ignorant mow get rich in dollars while the smartest is gatherin' only into facts," says I.
"Pre-else," says Peter; "some yourself."
"Some," I answers, "but much as I prefer the happy when I see you figurin' over any more coincided than ever to norance is bliss as the fellow said. From the 'Man who Studied,' by Nelson Lloyd in the Scribner's.

Rate-making Commission as Proposed.
"The rate-making power sought to grant the interstate commerce Commission to make rates bearing upon complaint," so William Sproule in an address before the Commonwealth Club of California, would carry a still greater power anyone can bring a complaint, broad to include hundreds of thousands of rates. Upon all by the commission these rates shall be fixed and the redjusting hearings or investigations deferred or perhaps pre-termined by the mission.
"Under our political system hard to conceive political arising under which the Interstate Commerce Commission might be a controlling factor in a political campaign through the exercise of a full president of his own conviction general rate reduction or adjustment by excessive pressure upon the commission. This effort might be met and the pressure exerted alike spirit of altruistic patriotism and patriotic political necessity, or either case would amount to the railroad revenue and improve of their values to meet political." "In the case of the Panama Commission summarily removed President impartially of delay anxious for results, we have seen may be done by the exercise of the prerogative, and what happened with the common commission."
