

My Patients Send Their Friends to Me.

The best advertisement a dentist can have is a satisfied patient. My up-to-date equipment and painless methods make dental work a pleasure to my patients. If you have't tested my work yet, all I ask is that you come and see me. You don't need to pay ten dollars for a plate that I will make for five. You pay too much if your dentist charges you two dollars when I will fill the same tooth for one dollar. I make no charge for examination.

TELLS STORY OF GRAFT

A Jefferson City dispatch says: Records of thousands of panel-house robberies, in which money and jewelry valued at $1,000,000 were stolen and shared with the police, will be presented to the St. Louis grand jury next week in the shape of a ledger kept by Ollie Roberts, who conducted three panel-houses in the Missouri metropolis, and now is serving a ten-year sentence in the penitentiary here for murder.

The ledger contains the dates of the robberies, the names of the victims, where they were learned, the amounts taken, and the share the police got. Six police sergeants, 25 uniformed patrolmen, 29 special officers and 8 detectives of Chief Desmond's staff are named as participants in the division of the booty, and so heavy a tribute did the police levy on the report keeper that they got 75 per cent of the value of the robberies.

Kept Account in Ledger.
Ollie Roberts today told her astounding tale of police graft to Andrew C. Maroney, police commissioner of St. Louis, who was assistant circuit attorney under Folk. She likewise told him where the ledger was and made arrangements for it to be turned over to him immediately on his arrival in St. Louis.

The "graft book" covers a period of five years. It mentions hundreds of names well known in St. Louis, and visitors to the city are numbered by the thousands. Ninety-two women are named as figuring in the robberies and the record of each theft tells how much went to the proprietor, how much to the woman who perpetrated the theft, how much to the police and whether or not the victim made any complaint to the officers. The woman will be taken to St. Louis next week to testify before the grand jury in the corroboration of the entries in her books.

Trick to Destroy Evidence.
In her story to the police commissioner today she said the police compelled her and other proprietors of panel-houses to decorate their rooms in accordance with a color scheme devised by the officers. This was in order to tell them where the robberies occurred, when victims could not remember the location of the houses, but could describe the decorations. The police then hurried to get their share, but not to force restitution of the stolen property. She also said that she had an agreement with the police when she was convicted that every effort should be made to obtain a pardon for her. If this failed, it was decided she was to commit suicide. She learned later, she says, that this was merely a trick on the part of the police to get her to end her life, so she could not expose them.

Assassin Hired by Police.
Sam Lear, who for many years was a professional bondsman in the district known as the bad lands, is now telling the grand jury what he knows about police corruption. His story is said to corroborate that of the Roberts woman. Lear appeared before the police board today and asked permission to carry two revolvers, informing the commissioners that he had been informed by a man whom he once befriended that he (Lear) is to be assassinated. The man told Lear that two policemen had offered him $300 to "put Lear off watch," and that he had undertaken the job with the purpose of putting Lear on guard. The man was so frightened at what he had done that he told Lear he was going to leave town at once before the police "got him."

Shielded a Murderess.
It is understood that Ollie Roberts told Mr. Maroney today the name of the policeman who hid the pistol with which she killed John Kelley. Maroney prosecuted the Roberts woman, and learned early in the case that she was being protected by the police. The revolver with which the killing was done mysteriously disappeared. Witnesses were intimidated into leaving the state. The first trial resulted in a hung jury. Then Maroney got mad. He caused it to be known that, unless the missing revolver turned up, he would stir up the entire police department and send a dozen to the penitentiary. He got the revolver and he succeeded in convicting the woman.

Today she told Maroney that she had been promised by the police that if she was convicted a speedy new trial or pardon would be obtained for her; that she agreed, if every effort was made to get her out of the penitentiary and failed, she would commit suicide; but that, when she learned the police were not making a sincere effort to free her, but were trying to trick her into suicide, she decided to "turn them all up."

MABEL WANTS COIN

In a series of very frank letters to her father, Charles H. Gillman, of this city, Mabelle Gillman, whose affair with William E. Corey, the steel magnate, is now interesting two continents, deliberately sets out in life with the intention of "enticing" a rich husband.

In her epistolary confessions to her sire, Miss Gillman tells of her first meeting with Mr. Corey, of the infatuation that followed, and the jealousy of Mrs. Corey. She declares without ado that a young girl is very foolish to "run with" young men.

"Dear Pop," she wrote four years ago, "I may surprise you all by marrying a very rich man."

That was while the actress was appearing in the "Mocking Bird" in Pittsburg, and long before the millionaire and his wife had any trouble Mr. Gillman says that Corey occupied a box at the opening performance and became infatuated with his daughter. Then followed a champagne dinner at a Pittsburg restaurant and several automobile rides about the city.

Mr. Gillman asserts that Corey and his wife had their first trouble when the latter heard that her husband had entertained the actress at the champagne dinner, and later the breach was made wider when Mrs. Corey saw a picture of Miss Gillman stretched at length on a couch and a picture of Corey an easel near at hand.

"I don't know why Corey" (her younger sister), writes Miss Gillman, "always runs with poor men. The other day I came home and found a very nice man with her, and they informed me that they were going to be married. I asked the young man if he was able to support my sister, and when he said that he thought he was I asked him how much he was getting. He said he wasn't getting much. I

That isn't true. Mabelle's mother and I were divorced several years ago. But Mabelle always had every luxury. She was born in Sacramento and I was at the time worth a quarter of a million. My daughter had horses and carriages and everything she wanted. There were two women to wait on her.

I want it distinctly understood that I am her father and I am proud that I am her parent.

"Mabelle has a sister, Cordella, who is with her, and four stepbrothers and sisters in this city. They are James, who is a bookkeeper for John Roblin; Pearl, Ruby and Eunice. Eunice is the youngest, and she's twelve. She is an actress and one of the cleverest little girls in San Francisco."

vere criticism, where criticism is deserved. If there is one thing our people cherish and honor more than another it is the relic of the Revolution and colonial history that has been preserved to us by our forbears—the Independence bell of Philadelphia, the manuscript of the Declaration in Washington, the flintlocks of Lexington and a few other monuments of similar character and significance. One of the most venerated of these heritages received from our ancestors is the frigate constitution, the pride and glory of the infant navy of these United States of America. By some curious and inexplicable eccentric movement of his mental mechanism Secretary Bonaparte turned aside from the course of his official duties and went far out of his way to recommend the destruction of this ancient ship by making her hull a target for our new naval guns to fire at!—Philadelphia Evening Telegraph.

asked him if after he got married he intended to live on me. You bet I was hot, and I told the young people that the thing would have to end right there."

Again Miss Gillman writes concerning the millionaire steel magnate: "He asked me how old I was and I told him I was 18 when I went on the stage, and that was three years ago, so I must be 15 now."

Mr. Gillman told today of the first champagne dinner given by Corey to his daughter.

"Nothing but the finest was opened," he said, "and my daughter had everything while she stayed in Pittsburg. It was that dinner which caused the trouble between the millionaire and his wife. I don't know anything about this man Corey, but when my daughter first met him she thought he was a single man.

"My daughter is wealthy now. She lives in Paris, and where do you suppose her money comes from? She has just invested a quarter of a million in New York real estate and has lots more than that.

"I don't know what will be the end of this Corey affair, as Mabelle hasn't written me about it recently, but I don't think she will bring a breach of promise suit. The girl is comfortable. She lives in Paris and has her sister and mother with her. Why should she want more?

"She is studying music in Paris and has every luxury. I think she will go on the stage again, for she is a very clever girl.

"There is only one thing I want corrected. The papers stated that Mabelle's mother was a widow and had to struggle to give her an education.

Protectionists Not Jealous.

We are told that, with a view to agitating for remedial tariff legislation, the Illinois Manufacturers' Association, a free trade organization, will consider the causes which are prompting large manufacturing companies in this country to establish plants in Canada, 132 leading companies having done so. These free traders need not search very deeply to find the leading cause. Canada has concluded to protect its manufacturing industries, as the United States has done. Capital is therefore attracted to Canada, which could not have happened if it had adhered to a policy of partial free trade. Our protective policy long ago attracted European capital to our country. The capital that now goes to Canada from the United States helps to develop Canadian resources and employ the Canadian people. Canada is therefore enriched, and this country is not injured in the least. On the contrary we are helped by the prosperity of Canada. The richer and more populous it becomes the better customers of ours it will be. We will sell it raw materials that it does not and cannot produce and manufactures also, and its people will have all the more money to spend in the United States for a thousand luxuries and necessities. Only a free trader could imagine that it would be better for us to have a poor neighbor on our northern frontier than a rich one. Canada is wise in building up its industries and rejecting the reciprocity of our free traders.—Swanks Iron and Steel Bulletin.
