

A New Magazine for You

I am bringing out another new magazine that you will come pretty close to liking. I wouldn't be surprised if it hit you harder than anything in the shape of a magazine you have ever seen. There isn't much style to it, but it has the stuff in it that you and everybody else will want to read. It is called

THE SCRAP BOOK

Something New in Magazine Making

THE SCRAP BOOK is the most elastic thing that ever happened in the way of a magazine—elastic enough to carry anything from a tin whistle to a battleship. Everything that appeals to the human brain and human heart comes within its compass—fiction, which is the backbone of periodical circulation; biography, review, philosophy, science, art, poetry, wit, humor, pathos, satire, the weird, the mystical—everything that can be classified and everything that cannot be classified. A paragraph, a little bit, a saying, an editorial, a joke, a maxim, an epigram.

Nothing Like It in the World

There isn't anything in the world just like THE SCRAP BOOK. It is an idea on which we have been working for several years, and for which we have been gathering materials. We have bought hundreds and hundreds of scrap books from all over the country, some of them a century old, and are still buying them. From these books we are gathering and classifying an enormous number of gems, and facts and figures, and historical and personal bits that are of rare value. Furthermore, we have a corps of people ransacking libraries, reading all the current publications, the leading daily papers, and digging out curious and quaint facts and useful facts and figures from reference book, cyclopedia, etc., etc.

Don't fail to get a copy of this first issue of THE SCRAP BOOK. It sells at the price at which all our other magazines sell—Ten Cents a Copy and One Dollar by the Year.

Seeing Mt. Shasta From the Delightful Observation Cars

Saturday, Feb. 17, 1906.

Continuing our trip through Southern Oregon, we had the benefit of an observation car, which runs from Roseburg to Dunsmuir. It is a privilege which means much to tourists and sight-seers, but really it is of no great benefit to the country it passes through, so in fact the Willamette valley has no very great complaint against the S. P. Co. for not giving us this modern convenience of travel. At Medford and Ashland we saw what will be of much greater benefit to Salem—permanent exhibits of products at the railway depot. At both of these points neat booth-like buildings are maintained on the depot grounds. They are built like large show windows all around, being about 10x20 feet in size, with an ornamental swiss or pagoda roof. There is a door at one end where the articles are taken in and out and the person who does the window dressing act has a passage way reserved in the center for working. The two exhibits mentioned look as though they contained portions of their respective country exhibits at the state fair, and attract the attention of all new comers.

After a month of sunshine in Oregon, coming to California is a novel experience, for we have had constant rain since leaving home, and our Oregon umbrellas come in good play whenever we get off. The advice to an Oregonian to see California always reminds one of Jefferson's advice to his friend Monroe. The sage of Monticello told the exponent of modern doctrine of "mind your own business," by all means to see France, as it would make him "adore his own country." All our people who come back from a trip to this neighbor state get about the same experience, and I will be no exception to the rule.

Yes, that observation car is a great convenience to travelers, for it allows them to mingle more freely than either the democratic day coaches or the more aristocratic Pullmans. The ladies can get together and hob-nob, not to say gossip, while the men have genuine club room conveniences in the large smoking compartment. Among the ladies assembled in our car there was our dowager-like traveler who answered everybody with her gracious manner and unheeded frankness. She dubbed every chance acquaintance of her sex as "dearie," and related her numberless social conquests with a freedom worthy of a Madame de Malesherbes.

Among other things she told her newly-made friends how she managed to carry off more prizes at the card parties than any other woman in her town. She always posts up on the newest games and then springs them on the town, when of course she is an easy winner against her fellow-players who know nothing of the game. Thus she has the distinction of being a good player, and gets the lion's share of the prizes.

I witnessed an interesting display of card playing, and while most of the tables confined themselves to stakes from the buffet sideboard, there was one good hard-fought game of poker with considerable cash in sight. Nobody asked whether it was a violation of the Oregon or California statutes, but the money changed hands just the same.

We enjoyed this car most for the privileges it gave us in seeing Mt. Shasta. The rain and fog were a trifle too heavy to see it at its best, but the great pile is always of interest to both young and old.

We spent our second night out at Dunsmuir, a railroad town of 1000 people, just below Shasta Springs, where there is a $20,000 monthly payroll from the S. P. Co. A good hotel is found there, but no trains stop for meals at this season. The payroll of $20 a month for each man, woman and child of the place ought to make some prosperity, and it must keep some of the inhabitants busy to spend it fast enough.

The scenery from Shasta down the canyon to Redding is superb, but is very much the same as we have in many parts of Oregon. The Sacramento river here is a small tumbling

School News

High School.

The Demosthenes Literary Society had its regular meeting yesterday evening, after 3:40, in the society room. The president being absent the meeting was conducted by the vice-president, Marguerite Meyers. The time was spent in the transaction of various business of the society, there being no program arranged. The society decided to study Shakespeare next meeting, and especially "Merchant of Venice," as it is to be played in Salem soon. The roll call will be answered by quotations from Shakespeare. The society had its regular paper out for the first yesterday. It consists of eight pages, the cover lavender and cream, the society colors, and contains a well written "Prospectus," the "1906 New Year's Resolutions," "The Constitution of the Society," "A Toast to Demosthenes," a poem "Old Demosthenes," by Perry Reigleman, and the names of the members. The paper was arranged by Arthur Pearson, Berli Goode and Winona Savage, and printed by Berli Goode. The contest in the society over securing new members, debating, literary, etc., is beginning to tell on the roll. The majority of the freshmen have given their names in, and are now in the fight.

Another pupil was suspended for unexcused absence yesterday. Following the announcement of the suspension, Prof. Mariatte made a little talk to the students in a friendly manner, and insisted that, if any had a personal grievance for any reason against him, they would do him a favor by coming and telling him in a friendly manner. He said that he admired frankness above anything in a student. He suggested that he could not find the student in order to straighten any little misunderstanding or difference of opinion, but that they know where to find him at all times, and can see him without any trouble. He said that the students and teachers should be better acquainted, should know each other better, and thus be able to work more in harmony and thus accomplish more. He said that he would be glad to receive suggestions from any students or body of students, and would consider them, and, if they met with his approval, make use of them.

There has been some little trouble and time lost because of the time to go from the lower floor to the assembly hall, and the difficulty of hearing the small bell. From now on the bell will be run over the landing of the second floor a couple of minutes before 1 and 9 o'clock. From there it can be heard all over the building, and those on the lower floor can have time to get to their seats.

A number of students were required to stay in after school yesterday evening and confer with Mr. Mariatte about careless use of their desks. A few have thoughtlessly marked or scratched their desks, and Mr. Mariatte's verdict is "that they will have to make it right."

The seats in Miss Richards' class room have been changed to face to the east of the room. The windows are on the north side, and the change was made to secure the light for the pupils over the left shoulder, and also to prevent the light from shining directly in the students' face. There was a mistake made in the finishing of the room, because when the seats are placed legally, so that the light is from the left of the pupil, the blackboards are to the side and back, and not in front. This can easily be remedied, however.
